About Bapuji

Bapuji (full name: Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly called “Dadaji” by the younger generation) was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. However, he spent his childhood in another village named Ambasan, also located in the Mehsana district.

In the early part of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realizing the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers to realize their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times, he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy (CA), he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law (LLB) degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, he established a spiritual institution called “Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay” in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world, filled with suffering and disorder, into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt. Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as “Maa,” worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to 18 hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realized through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of superconsciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji’s teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the types of celestial creators across different dimensions, the creation of our solar system, galaxy, and universe, and most importantly, the transcendental knowledge of the multiverse and realities beyond it. His knowledge is supremely profound and is intended for highly evolved seekers, referred to as “behad souls.” According to Bapuji, these “behad souls” will play a key role in transforming this mortal world into an eternal divine realm.

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

This book brings together Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel’s teachings on one of the most tender subjects in all of life — the journey of a soul into birth. It speaks of how a soul enters the womb, how a child is truly shaped, and how a mother and father can offer the highest care to a new life.

Everything in these pages is drawn from Bapuji’s spoken discourses. Nothing has been added to his knowledge; only its presentation has been gently arranged, so that it may be read in peace by anyone, with no prior background.

The teaching is offered in the spirit of garbh sanskaar — the conscious, loving preparation of a soul before birth. May it bring clarity and quietness to every reader, and through them, to the little ones who are still to arrive.

Chapter One

What Garbh Sanskaar Truly Means

Garbh sanskaar means the spiritual care and preparation given to a soul during the time it is forming in the mother's womb. It is the conscious shaping of the inner life of a child before that child is ever born.

Sanskar means the deep impressions and tendencies that a soul carries within itself. Garbh sanskaar, then, is the care of these impressions while the new life is still in the womb — a tending of the soul before the body has fully come.

Yet this subject is far wider than childbirth alone. It touches the transformation of the soul, the healing of karma, and, through these, the upliftment of the world itself. When we truly understand how a soul enters life, we begin to understand life itself.

This book journeys through one of life's most sacred processes — the ancient wisdom of Garbh Sanskaar brought to life, step by step. From the divine moment a soul chooses its vessel and enters the womb, to the invisible forces that shape its body, mind, and spirit within; from the karmic imprints and ancestral echoes a child carries even before its first breath, to the profound power a mother and father hold to consciously elevate that incoming life — this is not merely a book about motherhood. It is a map for creating a conscious human being.

Chapter Two

When the Soul Enters the Womb

Before a child is born, a soul enters the womb. It does not arrive as a fully formed being. It enters as a single point of conscious energy — a subtle seed of life.

The soul enters first, and the body gradually forms around its presence. As the embryo develops in the womb, the physical structure grows and takes shape around the soul that has already arrived. In this way, the soul precedes the body, while the body serves as the vessel that gradually develops around it.

In the early months of development, the soul resides within the forming body, yet its awareness remains dormant. As the body grows, the soul gradually awakens. By about the fifth month, it becomes partially conscious, and by the sixth or seventh month, it gains a clearer awareness of itself and of its existence within the womb.

Thus, life in the womb is not a state of mere waiting. A conscious being is already present within the developing body, and with each passing day, its awareness becomes progressively more awakened and refined.

Chapter Three

Memory and Forgetting in the Womb

A soul does not enter a new life as a blank slate. It carries with it the impressions, tendencies, and karmic records accumulated from its previous experiences. While in the womb, the soul may become aware of these past karmic patterns and the journey that has brought it to its present birth.

Sometimes, in this state, the soul feels regret over the wrong actions — the sins — of its earlier life. Seeing what it has carried, a quiet remorse can arise within it before birth.

Yet as the time of birth comes closer, this memory begins to fade. And once the child is born, it forgets almost everything it knew before birth.

This forgetting is not an accident. It is part of the karmic system itself. If every soul remembered all of its past, life on earth would become unbearable. The gentle veil of forgetfulness allows the soul to begin again.

Chapter Four

How the Subtle Body Shapes the Body

A human being is not merely a visible body. Within the physical form lies the sukshma sharir (subtle body), and within it are preserved the soul's impressions and karmic records. As the soul develops in the womb, it is affected by both its own past tendencies and the mother's physical and mental state. The mother's body nourishes the child, while her thoughts, emotions, and state of consciousness influence the awakening soul. Thus, the formation of the child reflects the interaction of the soul's past inheritance and the mother's present influence.

It is the soul's own subtle body that shapes the gross body taking form. The outer body follows the inner pattern that the soul has brought.

For this reason, a child's face and figure may not resemble the parents exactly. The body is shaped first by the soul that has entered, not by the parents alone.

The body is not random. It is a signature.

When a great soul enters the womb, it does not simply occupy a body — it authors one. The features that form, the eyes that take shape, the very way the child will one day stand and move — all of it is an expression of who has arrived. The face is not merely biology. It is identity made visible.

A soul of high nature leaves its mark on the very flesh it inhabits.

This is why some children are born with a presence that cannot be explained — a stillness, a depth, a light that others notice but cannot name. They did not develop it. They brought it. And the body, faithful to its innermost inhabitant, simply made it known.

In the face of a child, if you look closely enough, you can see who has come.

Chapter Five

Why a Child Is Born With Illness

It is one of the hardest questions a parent can ask: why is a child born with illness, or with disability?

The answer lies deeper than the body. Disease can already exist in the karan sharir, the causal body, before birth. The illness is carried inwardly before it ever appears outwardly.

Not every wound visible on the body was created in this lifetime.

The soul carries what it has not yet resolved. Karma — the accumulated weight of choices made across lifetimes — does not vanish at death. It travels. And when the soul enters a new womb, it brings with it everything left unfinished, everything left unatoned. What was unresolved in the invisible realm of the spirit can surface as limitation in the visible realm of the body.

This is why some children arrive in the world already carrying a burden. A child born blind, a child born with a body that does not work as it should, a child who faces illness — cancer, failing organs, compromised blood — before it has even had the chance to truly live. These are not accidents of nature. They are echoes of what the soul still owes to existence.

The body, in its quiet and unfailing honesty, reflects the unfinished business of the soul.

This is not a teaching of cruelty. It is a teaching of responsibility — a reminder that every action leaves a mark, and that mark travels further than we imagine.

The field of epigenetics has proven that trauma, pain, and unresolved experience alter gene expression — and those alterations are passed down to the next generation. Children of war survivors, famine victims, and deeply traumatized individuals have been found to carry the biological imprint of suffering they never personally lived through. Science calls it transgenerational epigenetic inheritance. The ancients called it karma. The terminology has changed. The underlying truth has not.

Such conditions are not random misfortune. Some karmic defects appear even before birth is complete. What the soul carries within, the body slowly comes to express.

Chapter Six

The Causal Body and the Records of Disease

To understand this clearly, we must understand the causal body. The karan sharir is the deepest of the inner bodies. It is the storehouse of the soul's records — including the records of disease.

When a soul enters a body, its entry can carry disease-related recordings with it. The causal body carries these defects from one birth into the next.

Before the physical body exists, another body does — one that science has not yet named, but one that the ancient seers mapped with extraordinary precision.

Within this causal body — the deepest, most foundational layer of a soul's existence — there are subtle units of information, blueprints encoded long before flesh and bone take form. When these blueprints are intact, the physical body that assembles around them reflects that integrity — in health, in strength, in wholeness. But when these subtle blueprints carry damage — the residue of unresolved karma, of accumulated transgression across lifetimes — that damage does not stay hidden. It materializes. It becomes the body.

The causal body is not metaphor. It is architecture. And like any flawed architectural plan handed to a builder, its errors do not disappear in construction — they become the structure itself.

A soul that arrives with a clear, undamaged causal body gives rise to a body of remarkable vitality. A soul that arrives carrying interior damage builds, faithfully and inevitably, a body that reflects it.

What we are born with is not chance. It is a direct inheritance from the deepest layer of what we are.

This is why illnesses seen even in the womb may already reflect damage from a previous birth. Conditions such as heart defects can be carried from one life into the next. The child's body is built, cell by cell, from the causal body it has brought — whether defective or healthy.

Chapter Seven

The Karma of the Mother and the Father

The soul that enters the womb does not encounter neutral ground. It encounters the mother — her unresolved fears, her carried grief, her biochemical landscape shaped by every experience she has ever lived. For nine months, the two are not separate. What moves through her, moves through the child. What she has not healed does not stay within her — it becomes part of the environment in which an entire human being is constructed.

And the father is not absent from this equation. His biology, his unresolved patterns, his karmic accumulations — these arrive at the very moment of conception, encoded in the very material he contributes. The child is not born of love alone. It is born of the total sum of what both parents are — and what both parents have not yet resolved.

Science confirms this in its own language. Paternal epigenetics research has shown that a father's stress, his habits, his emotional states alter the genetic expression carried in his contribution to new life. The mother's prenatal psychology directly shapes the child's neural architecture, immune response, and stress thresholds.

The child is, in the most profound sense, a living meeting point — an embodiment of everything both parents brought to that moment, seen and unseen, resolved and unresolved.

This is not a teaching that assigns blame. It is a teaching that assigns responsibility — to both parents, long before the child is born.

Everything the forming soul experiences in those nine months — its first sensations, its first impressions of existence — comes filtered through the environment the mother's body and mind create. A womb held in peace, in purity, in conscious awareness, becomes a sanctuary. And a soul that grows within a sanctuary begins life already rooted, already steady, already whole.

But a womb disturbed — by chronic stress, by fear, by emotional turbulence, by physical neglect — becomes the child's first experience of an unsafe world. And that impression does not leave. It settles into the nervous system, into the cells, into the very way the child will one day respond to life.

The mother's inner state is the child's outer environment. Her peace is its peace. Her chaos is its chaos. Her healing is, quite literally, its foundation.

Chapter Eight

Why Medicine Alone Cannot Heal

When a child is born suffering, our first instinct is to reach for medicine. And medicine must be reached for — it saves lives, it relieves pain, it buys time. Its place is real and its value is undeniable.

But medicine works on what it can see and touch. It operates on the physical body — the tissue, the organ, the cell. It can repair the expression of a problem. What it cannot do is reach the origin of it.

A surgery can correct a defect. It cannot dissolve the karma that created it. A medicine can manage a condition. It cannot cleanse the subtle body where that condition was first written.

This is not a criticism of medicine. It is an understanding of its jurisdiction.

The gross physical body is only the outermost layer of a human being. Beneath it lie subtler layers — the energetic body, the emotional body, the causal body — and it is within these deeper layers that the true cause of many conditions quietly resides. Modern medicine, extraordinary as it is, has not yet found instruments fine enough to reach there.

To treat only the body while leaving the soul untouched is to silence an alarm without addressing the fire.

True healing — complete healing — must move inward. It must reach the layer where the wound actually began.

Even pranayama, the disciplined practices of the breath, can improve the breath-related and mental layers of a person, but it cannot, by itself, fully cure the causal body. The deepest record remains untouched by these means.

Indeed, many childhood problems are, at their root, karmic and subtle in origin. This is why true healing must go deeper than the body. The cause that lies in the causal body must be addressed where it actually lives.

Chapter Nine

Charging the Soul With Divine Light

If the wound lives in the causal body, then medicine alone will never be enough. The scalpel cannot reach there. The pill cannot travel that deep. What lives at the level of the soul can only be healed at the level of the soul.

The causal body is not healed by physical intervention. It is healed by light — divine light, conscious energy, the deliberate infusion of higher spiritual force into the deepest layer of a human being. This is not poetry. This is the most precise and targeted form of healing that exists — because it addresses the cause, not merely its shadow on the surface.

When the causal body is charged with this light, something extraordinary happens. The blueprint changes. The damage that was encoded across lifetimes begins to clear. And as the blueprint clears, the bodies built around it — the subtle body, and ultimately the physical body — begin to reflect that clarity.

This is the heart of the matter. This is what everything else points toward.

And here lies the most profound truth of all — healing at this depth does not end with this life. The causal body travels. It carries forward everything imprinted within it, from one birth to the next, across the vast arc of a soul's journey. A wound healed at this level is not healed for today alone. It is healed for lifetimes. A child whose causal body is purified and elevated does not merely live a better life — it arrives into its next existence already lighter, already freer, already closer to its highest possibility.

◆ “Yog agni se, param light se, paap aur punya ki recording jo karan sharir mein padi hai, woh jal jaati hai.”

“Through the fire of yog, through the supreme light, the recordings of sin and merit lying in the causal body are burnt away.”

Chapter Ten

The Mother Becomes Soul-Conscious

The transmission of divine light begins not in a temple, not in a ritual — it begins in the inner state of the mother.

Before conception, and from the very first moment she knows a soul has entered her, the mother holds a power that no external force can replicate. She is not merely a biological vessel. She is the child's first spiritual environment. And the quality of that environment depends entirely on the quality of her inner state.

This is why the mother must become soul-conscious.

To be soul-conscious is to make a profound shift — to stop identifying solely with the body, with its fears, its cravings, its anxieties — and to rest, deliberately and deeply, in the awareness of oneself as a soul. Atma swaroop. The original self. The self that exists before the body and beyond it. From this state of inner stillness and clarity, the mother turns her awareness toward the supreme source — the Almighty, the infinite reservoir of light, power, and divine intelligence from which all souls originally emerged.

And in that connection, something begins to flow.

A mother established in soul-consciousness does not merely carry a child. She charges it. With every moment of genuine meditation, with every breath drawn in divine remembrance, she sends light — real, living, transformative light — into the causal body of the child, into its subtle body, into the very cells of its forming physical frame. She is rewriting the blueprint from the inside. She is clearing what karma had damaged. She is strengthening what was weak.

Her meditation is not a passive act. It is the most active thing she can do for her child.

No doctor, no surgery, no medicine can reach where a mother's soul-conscious awareness can reach. Because she is already there — already connected, already inside the child's world, already woven into its very formation.

A mother who meditates does not just carry a child through pregnancy. She carries it toward its highest possible life.

Her inner light is not a small thing. It is the greatest gift she will ever give — given not after birth, not through education or provision — but now, in silence, in stillness, in the sacred space of her own awakened soul.

◆ “Agar yaad ki vidhi sahi hai, sahi gyan hai, to upar se power aayega.”

“If the method of remembrance is correct, and the knowledge is right, then power descends from above.”

Chapter Eleven

What the Mother Feels, the Child Receives

The bond between mother and child in the womb is not only physical. The child in the womb can receive the mother's vibrations directly.

Whatever enters the mother's mind reaches the child. Her thoughts are not private; they flow inward to the one she carries. A peaceful mother naturally gives rise to a peaceful child.

A mother's thoughts are not private during pregnancy. They are shared with soul borne by her.

Every emotion she carries, every thought she entertains, every inner storm she moves through — the child receives it all. Not metaphorically. Not symbolically. Directly, biologically, and spiritually. The mother's inner weather is the child's first sky. If that sky is filled with fear, anxiety, and darkness, the child's first experience of existence is one of unsafety. If that sky is filled with peace, love, and divine awareness, the child's first impression of life is one of light.

This is why a negative thought during pregnancy is never just a thought. And a positive one is never just a thought either. One burdens the forming soul. The other blesses it.

And so the mother must be careful — not with anxiety, but with consciousness — about what she allows to occupy her inner world. What she thinks, what she feels, what she listens to, what she speaks — all of it reaches the child. The womb has ears. The forming soul is listening.

This is why sacred knowledge must fill the space of pregnancy. The mother should hear, again and again, the highest truths — that the soul is eternal, that the body is temporary, that this life is not the first and will not be the last, that the soul is inherently powerful, inherently pure, inherently divine.

These are not merely comforting words. Received in the earliest stage of formation, before the mind has built its walls and the ego has formed its defenses, these truths land at the deepest possible level. They become the child's first sanskaars — its very first impressions of what existence is and what it means to be alive.

A child that hears sacred truth before it is even born does not have to spend a lifetime searching for it. It arrives already knowing.

The mother who fills her pregnancy with divine knowledge, with uplifting words, with conscious thought — she is not simply staying positive. She is doing the most foundational work of parenting, long before the child takes its first breath.

Chapter Twelve

Motherhood and Fatherhood as Spiritual Responsibility

Seen in this light, motherhood is not only a physical role. It is also a spiritual responsibility. To carry a soul is, in truth, to shape a soul.

And the responsibility is not the mother's alone. The father's state also matters in the family atmosphere. The father's inner condition influences the child's karma and environment as surely as the mother's does.

Every child is shaped not only by the genes of its parents but also by the unseen influence of their thoughts, emotions, habits, and sanskars. The inner world of the parents becomes the first environment the child encounters and absorbs. For this reason, the greatest preparation for parenthood is self-transformation. Before seeking to shape a child, one must first shape oneself, for the character of the parents becomes the soil from which the child's future life will grow.

Chapter Thirteen

Why a Soul Comes to a Particular Family

Why does a particular soul take birth to particular parents? According to the law of karma, it is not a matter of chance. Souls are drawn into specific families through karmic relationships, past associations, and deep attachments carried from previous lives. Birth occurs where these bonds can continue, be fulfilled, transformed, or resolved. Thus, the meeting of a soul with its parents is part of a larger karmic journey rather than a random event.

Attachment shapes where a soul is born. A soul attached to a house is born again into a similar house. A soul attached to wealth is born into money-based situations. A soul attached to fear is born into fear-filled situations. As the attachment was, so the next birth tends to be; the relationships of the next birth are shaped by the attachments of the previous one.

Even the most subtle aspects of human relationships—attraction, communication, trust, respect, and understanding—are often shaped by karmic connections. This is why, in the same circumstances, one person may feel an immediate affinity toward someone while feeling no such connection with another. The bonds formed through past actions and relationships can influence who enters our lives, the roles they play, and the nature of our interactions with them. A soul that has come to recognize the binding power of such attachments may even hesitate to form new ties, seeking to avoid creating further karmic entanglements. Yet after birth, the memories of these past connections are largely veiled, and so these influences continue to operate silently beneath the surface, guiding human relationships in ways that are rarely understood.

Chapter Fourteen

Children of Fortune, Children of Karma

A child does not always enter a family by chance. Often, birth is the soul's way of returning to settle unfinished karmic accounts and complete bonds carried across lifetimes.

Because of this, some children bring happiness, peace, and good fortune into the home. Others bring suffering, hospital visits, and financial loss to the family. A child may be the carrier of an unresolved karmic debt.

Family relationships often serve as the field where old karmic accounts are settled. Through love, sacrifice, support, or hardship, what remains unfinished is brought toward completion. Yet in the end, each soul walks with its own karma and must bear the consequences of its own actions.

◆ “Har koi atma apna hi paap aur punya bhogti hai, doosron ka paap-punya nahi bhogti.”

“Every soul experiences only its own sin and merit; it does not experience the sin or merit of others.”

None of this is random. The child's birth is never random. Pregnancy, birth, and family life are all part of the soul's karmic accounting.

Chapter Fifteen

Destiny Is Written in the Causal Body

This brings us to the question of destiny — of Bhagya. Bhagya and karma are deeply connected; they are not two separate things.

Destiny is not written somewhere far away. It is already written in the causal body. The record the soul carries is, in a very real sense, its destiny.

In ancient understanding there was the idea of Bhagya Devi, a goddess who writes each soul's fate. In the present age, this writing has become automatic. The soul itself now produces its own destiny, without an external writer. What we carry within writes what we meet without.

Chapter Sixteen

The Soul Is Greater Than DNA

The causal body carries the deeper blueprint of the soul's destiny. Therefore, a powerful soul is not bound solely by the inheritance of its parents. Through the strength of its own consciousness and accumulated merit, it can transcend inherited tendencies, overcome limitations of lineage, and manifest its own unique destiny.

The example is Prahlad — a soul of great strength born into a demon family. His parentage did not decide him; his own soul did. This shows that the soul's category is more important than the parents' category.

Another example is the saint Raidas — a high soul born into a family of low social status. The greatness of the soul shone regardless of the circumstances of birth.

A weaker soul is more easily shaped by inherited traits, family conditioning, and ancestral patterns. A stronger soul, however, is not confined by the limits of its lineage. It can rise above inherited tendencies, transform the patterns it receives, and chart a higher course for its life. The parents provide the body, but it is the soul's own strength, consciousness, and karma that ultimately determine what it becomes.

Chapter Seventeen

The Home as a Field of Vibration

A child is shaped not only in the womb, but in the home it is born into. The atmosphere of the home affects both unborn children and children already born.

A home filled with Paramshanti vibrations — the vibration of supreme peace — becomes healing for everyone within it. Such a home is itself a kind of medicine.

For this reason, children should be surrounded by knowledge, peace, and divine remembrance. They should be trained from infancy in spiritual understanding, and the whole family should hear spiritual knowledge together.

A home's vibration becomes a child's inheritance. The consciousness cultivated within the family today becomes the character, destiny, and spiritual direction the child carries into the future. What the home embodies now, the next generation will live out tomorrow.

Chapter Eighteen

Connecting to the Ultimate Source

We have seen that the soul must be charged with divine light if it is to awaken its highest potential. The question then arises: Where does this supreme light come from?

This point must be understood clearly. Practices such as worship, the study of sacred scriptures, mantra recitation, yajna, charity, and other virtuous actions are all valuable. They purify the mind, cultivate noble qualities, and help prepare the soul for spiritual growth. Yet these practices, by themselves, do not fully charge the causal body, where the deepest impressions and destiny of the soul are stored.

Just as a battery can be charged only by connecting it to a source of power, the soul receives its highest spiritual energy only through a direct connection with the Supreme Source. The Almighty Authority is the original reservoir of divine light, wisdom, peace, and power. When the soul establishes a living connection with that Supreme Reality, it begins to receive a higher spiritual current that no external practice alone can provide.

Therefore, while spiritual disciplines are important and beneficial, the highest method of empowering and transforming the soul is direct communion with the Almighty. From that connection comes the divine light that illuminates the causal body, awakens the soul's true nature, and enables it to rise beyond its limitations.

It must be understood that divine power exists in different degrees and levels. Gods, goddesses, and other exalted spiritual beings may possess great light and power, yet they are not the ultimate source of all divine energy. Just as a lamp shines because it is connected to a greater source of power, all spiritual beings derive their light from a higher reality. According to this understanding, Shiv, Mahashiv, Param Mahashiv, and ultimately the Supreme Powerhouse represent ascending levels of spiritual authority and power, each greater than the one before. Therefore, the soul should not stop at intermediate levels, however elevated they may appear. To receive the fullest charge of divine light, wisdom, peace, and spiritual strength, the soul must establish a direct connection with the Supreme Source itself—the highest and ultimate reservoir of all power. The closer the soul comes to that supreme reality, the greater its transformation, awakening, and fulfilment.

Chapter Nineteen

A Child of the Infinite Father

When a soul recognizes its true origin and its relationship with the Supreme Father, a profound transformation takes place within. Fear begins to dissolve, inner strength awakens, and a deep sense of protection arises. A soul that knows it belongs to the Supreme no longer feels lost, helpless, or alone. It stands rooted in an unshakable foundation, supported by the highest power in existence. To know whose child one truly is is to discover one's true identity, strength, and security, and to walk through life with confidence, purpose, and fearlessness.

Self-confidence grows when one knows the soul's true Father/Creator. The soul should think of itself as a traveller from the highest dimensions of worlds of creations — not merely from this physical world.

For this reason, the soul's history and purpose of birth are of profound importance. When a person understands why they have come into this life and what their soul is meant to achieve, everyday life gains meaning, direction, and clarity. A child raised with this awareness does not grow up feeling insignificant, confused, or lost. Instead, such a child develops a deep sense of identity, purpose, and self-worth. Anchored in the knowledge of who they are and why they are here, they carry a quiet inner strength that remains steady through life's challenges.

This is not a matter reserved for some distant day of judgment. In the law of karma, judgment is taking place every moment. Every thought, word, and action becomes part of the soul's own account, and every soul is responsible for what it creates. Nothing is lost, forgotten, or erased. Day by day, the record is written, and day by day, we experience the consequences of our own choices. We do not wait for judgment in the future; we live within it now, continually meeting the results of what we ourselves have set into motion.

Chapter Twenty

How to Dissolve Bad Karma During Pregnancy

This brings us to one of the most practical and important questions of all: how can the burden of negative karma be reduced or dissolved, especially during the sacred period of pregnancy? To answer this, the entire teaching must be understood as one whole. Within the causal body of every soul are stored the records of both paap (demerit) and punya (merit)—the accumulated results of past thoughts, actions, and intentions. These records form the soul’s personal karmic account and accompany it from life to life. No soul bears the karma of another, nor can one soul transfer its karmic responsibility to someone else. Each soul experiences the consequences of its own actions and reaps the fruits of its own deeds. Therefore, the path to freedom begins with understanding, purifying, and transforming one’s own karmic account.

How, then, can these karmic records be purified and dissolved? The answer lies in the fire of yog—yog agni—the divine light it draws from the highest source. When the soul establishes a conscious and correct connection with Shiv, Mahashiv, Param Mahashiv, or ultimately the Almighty Authority, using the right knowledge and method, it opens itself to a higher current of spiritual power. From that supreme source descends param jyoti—the highest divine light. This light does not merely inspire the soul; it purifies it. Just as intense fire burns away impurities, the fire of yog gradually burns the accumulated burden of negative karma and awakens the soul’s original purity. The deeper and more constant the connection, the greater the flow of divine power, and the greater the transformation within the soul.

When the highest divine light enters the soul, the accumulated records of both paap (demerit) and punya (merit) stored within the causal body begin to dissolve. In the fire of yog agni, these karmic impressions are gradually burnt away, loosening the chains that bind the soul to the cycle of action and reaction. As this purification deepens, the soul moves toward the karmatit state—the state beyond karma. In that elevated condition, the burdens of the past no longer hold power over the soul. Old karmic accounts are settled, their influence comes to an end, and the soul stands free, pure, and untouched by the weight of previous actions. Karma becomes a completed chapter of the journey rather than an ongoing bondage.

◆ “Karmatit avastha ka matlab hai karma se ateet — karma bhootkaal ho gaya, karma raba hi nahi.”

“The karmatit state means beyond karma — karma has become the past; karma no longer remains.”

When karma is dissolved, the soul becomes very light. The mind becomes thought-free — nishankalp. As the soul is freed of the weight of negativity, the ether element within it increases, and with it grows the power to rise.

◆ “Atma balki ho gayi, nishankalp ho gayi, akash tatva badha, to upar jaane ki shakti badhi.”

“When the soul becomes light and free of thought, the ether element increases, and the power to rise upward grows.”

This is the highest protection a mother can give her child. A mother who, during pregnancy, draws this divine light into herself charges not only her own soul, but the causal, subtle, and gross bodies of the child she carries. The dissolving of her own karma becomes a quiet blessing upon the new life forming within her.

Chapter Twenty-One

From Childbirth to World Transformation

We began by saying that this subject extends far beyond the birth of a child. We can now appreciate the full depth of that statement. At its core, this teaching is not merely about pregnancy, parenthood, or the arrival of a new life. It is a profound science of the soul—its origin, its journey, its karmic inheritance, and its ultimate destiny. It reveals how karma is created, how it can be purified, how consciousness can be elevated, and how the soul can reconnect with its highest source. The birth of a child is only one chapter in a much larger process: the transformation of the individual soul, the liberation from karmic bondage, and the creation of a higher human civilization. When understood in its entirety, this teaching becomes not simply a guide to childbirth, but a blueprint for personal awakening, spiritual evolution, and the upliftment of humanity itself.

When a soul is infused with divine light before birth, an individual life is transformed. When mothers, fathers, and households are filled with the vibration of Paramshanti, the process extends beyond the individual and begins to transform the family itself. Families are the foundational units of civilization; they are where values, character, and consciousness are transmitted from one generation to the next. Therefore, the purification of a single soul is not an isolated event—it is the beginning of a much larger transformation. As enlightened souls give rise to elevated families, elevated families give rise to a better society, and a better society lays the foundation for a world of creation of higher divine values. In this way, the journey from soul awakening to world transformation begins not in institutions or governments, but in the consciousness of the individual and the atmosphere of the home.

This is the quiet promise within garbh sanskaar: that the care given to a single soul in the womb is, in truth, care given to the whole world of creation.

Glossary

Throughout this book, certain words from Bapuji's teachings appear in their original form. They are gathered here, with simple meanings, for the reader who is meeting them for the first time.

Akash Tatva — The ether element; the subtlest of the five elements. As it increases within the soul, the soul becomes lighter and gains the power to rise.

Almighty Authority — The supreme creator of the limitless (behad) world; the highest being in all of creation and the ultimate source of power.

Amar Lok — The immortal world, where physical death does not exist; a state of being beyond birth and death.

Ant Mati — The final state of consciousness, or last thought, at the time of death, which influences where the soul goes next.

Atma — The soul; a point of pure, conscious energy and divine light within every being. It is the true self, distinct from the body and the mind.

Atma Gyan — Knowledge of the soul's true identity.

Atma Swaroop (Soul Consciousness) — The state of resting in the soul's true nature — knowing oneself as the soul rather than the body.

Behad — Infinite; beyond all limits and boundaries.

Bhagya — Destiny or fortune; deeply connected to the karma a soul carries.

Bhagya Devi — In older understanding, the goddess said to write each soul's destiny.

Bhavatit — Beyond feelings and emotions; a state in which the soul rises above worldly attachment.

Divine Light — The pure spiritual light drawn into the soul through right remembrance, which heals and purifies it.

Garbh Sanskaar — The spiritual care and shaping of a soul during the time it is forming in the mother's womb.

Had — Limited; within boundaries — the finite dimensions of creation.

Ichha Mrityu — Death by will; the ability of a highly purified soul to leave the body consciously, by its own choice.

Jeevan Mukti — Liberation while living; freedom from all karmic accounts, with full knowledge of one's creator.

Karan Sharir (Causal Body) — The deepest inner body; the storehouse of the soul's karmic records, made of the subtlest element.

Karma — Action, and the energetic imprint left by every thought, word, and deed. It binds the soul to its future experiences.

Karm Bandhan — Karmic bondage; the binding ties created by past actions, thoughts, and relationships.

Karmatit — Beyond karma; the state in which the soul is free from the bondage of all past actions.

Mahashiv — The incorporeal creator of a galaxy; an authority above Shiv.

Maya — The illusory power of the world that causes the soul to forget its true nature.

Moh — Attachment and emotional binding.

Mukti — Freedom; liberation from the cycle of birth and death.

Nishankalp — Thought-free; the state of a mind that has become silent and free of all agitation.

Paap — Sin; wrong action recorded within the soul.

Param Light (Param Prakash) — Supreme light; the purest form of divine radiance, and the state of pure soul-consciousness.

Param Mahashiv — The incorporeal creator of a universe; an authority above Mahashiv.

Param Tatva — Supreme elements; the purified, higher form of the basic elements, of which the causal body is composed at the highest level.

Paramdham — The supreme abode; the original home of souls — a world of pure divine light. Also called Amar Lok, the immortal realm.

Paramshanti — Supreme peace; the original state of the soul resting in its pure divine light. It is also a vibration that can be radiated outward.

Pranayama — Disciplined practices of the breath, which refine the breath-related and mental layers of a person.

Prahlad — The well-known example of a soul of great spiritual strength born into a demon family, whose devotion was not decided by his parentage.

Punya — Merit; good action recorded within the soul.

Raidas (Saint Raidas) — The well-known example of a highly elevated soul born into a family of low social status, whose greatness shone regardless of birth.

Sanchit Karma — Accumulated karma from past lives that has not yet been experienced.

Sankalp — A divine intention or resolution, charged with spiritual power.

Sanskar — The deep inner impressions, tendencies, and habits a soul carries from one life to the next, recorded within the causal body.

Self-Realisation — The direct recognition that one is the soul, not the body — the foundation of all spiritual growth.

Shiv — The incorporeal creator of a solar system, residing in its supreme abode.

Spandan — Vibration; the effect that radiates outward from a deep thought or intention.

Sthool Sharir (Gross Body) — The visible, physical body, made of the five gross elements.

Sukshma Sharir (Subtle Body) — The non-physical body of thoughts, impressions, and tendencies that carries the soul's records beyond the gross body.

Tattva — Element; the fundamental building blocks of creation — earth, water, fire, air, and ether.

Vikarma — Wrong or negative action; sin. Such action binds the soul to lower states.

Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay — The spiritual institution founded by Bapuji in 1997 for the transformation of the world.

Yajna — A sacred ritual or offering.

Yog — Conscious connection between the soul and the Supreme, through which divine power is drawn into the soul. (Bapuji uses the word yog, not yoga.)

Yog Agni — The fire of yog; the inner fire, kindled by remembrance, that burns away karmic records.

Yog Bal — The power of yog; the spiritual strength gained through deep remembrance of the Supreme.

BEFORE A CHILD IS BORN, A SOUL IS ALREADY LISTENING.

Garbh Sanskaar explores the spiritual journey of the soul before birth — how karma, consciousness, the inner state of the parents, and divine light shape a child in the womb.

Based on the divine teachings of Bapuji Dashrathbhair Patel, this book presents motherhood and fatherhood not merely as biological roles, but as a sacred spiritual responsibility.

A gentle guide to the soul before birth, conscious parenting, and the sacred science of Garbh Sanskaar.
