About Bapuji

Bapuji (full name: Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly called “Dadaji” by the younger generation) was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. However, he spent his childhood in another village named Ambasan, also located in the Mehsana district.

In the early part of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realizing the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers to realize their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times, he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy (CA), he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law (LLB) degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, he established a spiritual institution called “Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay” in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world, filled with suffering and disorder, into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt. Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as “Maa,” worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to 18 hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realized through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of superconsciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji’s teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the types of celestial creators across different dimensions, the creation of our solar system, galaxy, and universe, and most importantly, the transcendental knowledge of the multiverse and realities beyond it. His knowledge is supremely profound and is intended for highly evolved seekers, referred to as “behad souls.” According to Bapuji, these “behad souls” will play a key role in transforming this mortal world into an eternal divine realm.

*The Infinite Law of Karma · Bapuji Dashrathbhai
Patel*

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

— by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

Of all the spiritual laws that govern the human experience, the Theory of Karma is perhaps the most practical and the most misunderstood. It explains why lives that begin in the same world look so different from the very first breath. It explains why some souls seem to carry light with them wherever they go, and why others seem to attract suffering no matter how hard they try. It explains why the same earth holds both sages and tyrants, children born into wealth and children born into hunger, love that lasts lifetimes and hatred that burns across generations.

Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel has spoken on this subject across many discourses, and from many different angles. He has explained karma as an inner science of the soul, recorded not on paper but in the causal body. He has traced how a single thought becomes a vibration, how a vibration becomes a habit, how a habit becomes a destiny, and how a destiny becomes a birth. He has shown why forgiveness dissolves karma while revenge multiplies it, why wealth earned by sinful means becomes a burden, and why knowledge alone — not ritual, not prayer chanted without understanding, not even the most earnest belief — is the true fire that burns accumulated karma.

Patel*

This book gathers those teachings and presents them in one place. Nothing external has been added. No foreign example, no outside philosophy, no personal interpretation has been allowed to dilute Bapuji's voice. The presentation has been refined only so that the reader can walk through these ideas without strain, chapter by chapter, from the first principles of what karma is to the final promise of Karmatit Awastha — the state beyond karma itself.

For a soul who reads with attention, this knowledge is enough. It is enough to understand why life is the way it is. It is enough to understand how to change it. And most importantly, it is enough to begin walking the path that ends in Paramshanti — supreme peace.

Overview

The Map of This Book

The Theory of Karma is vast. Bapuji has spoken about it in so many directions — the foundations of action, the layers that accumulate across births, the way the causal body stores every thought, word and actions, the connection of karma with destiny, with the body and face, with disease, with the five elements of nature, with natural disasters, with wars, with the decline of consciousness across the four yugas, with dreams, with the journey of the soul after death, and finally with liberation — that to present everything in one breath would overwhelm the reader.

This book therefore proceeds gently, beginning with what karma is and slowly building toward what freedom from karma looks like. The early chapters lay the foundation. They explain what karma is, its layered structure across births, the difference between merit and sin, the channels through which it is generated, and how it is recorded in the soul. From there the book moves outward: how karma shapes destiny, body, family, and environment; how entire societies are shaped by collective thought.

The middle chapters address the confusion of the modern age. They examine the popular idea of the Law of Attraction and show clearly, in Bapuji's own words, why thought alone cannot create reality without the power of the soul behind it. They examine forgiveness as a living practice, not a sentiment. They examine curses, revenge, pratikraman, and the limits of all of these.

The later chapters turn inward. They present nishkarm karma, karma yog, the two swords of Gita, and the real method by which accumulated karma is dissolved — not through ritual, not through repetition, but through yog agni, the fire of meditation in connection with the Almighty Authority. The final chapters describe what liberation actually means: Karmatit Awastha, the state of being beyond the results of action, and the return journey of the soul to Paramdham.

Throughout the book, small “Bapuji Insights” appear where a particular line from Bapuji carries immense depth. Each is shown first in the exact language Bapuji originally spoke, and then in English translation. These are not quotations to be memorised but moments to pause over.

The reader is encouraged to take this book slowly. It is not a text to be finished; it is a text to be absorbed.

CHAPTER I

The Foundation of Karma

Karma is the spiritual law that governs every human experience. Bapuji explains that karma is not limited to outward actions alone. Every thought that passes through the mind, every word spoken from the mouth, and every deed performed by the body generates karma. Nothing a soul does, says, or even imagines escapes this recording. For this reason, karma is the most fundamental principle a human being can understand, because every outcome in life — happiness, sorrow, relationships, wealth, health, birth, death — traces back to it.

The Three Channels of Karma

According to Bapuji, karma is generated through three primary channels: thoughts, words, and actions. A thought, though invisible, is itself a karma, because it produces a vibration. That vibration spreads into the atmosphere and influences not only the person thinking it but also the environment and the people around. A word, once spoken, is karma of a heavier kind because it carries the power of the soul behind it. And an action is the final expression of thought and word made visible in the physical world. All three levels create records in the soul.

Because thought is itself karma, mental discipline becomes as important as outer behaviour. A person who speaks kindly but harbours constant negativity inside creates karmic records that match the inner state, not the outer mask. Nothing about the inner life is hidden; everything is recorded.

The Three Types of Karma by Quality

Bapuji describes three categories of karma according to their nature. The first is satya karma — good or righteous action. These actions earn punya, or spiritual merit, and bring positive results in the present life or in future births. A soul performing good actions may experience happiness on earth and may even reach heaven after death. However, Bapuji makes one subtle point clearly: even good karma still binds the soul within the cycle of birth-rebirth. Good karma takes you to heaven, but heaven is still a dimension inside the cycle.

The second category is paap karma, also called vikarma — bad or sinful action. This type of action creates negative energy within the soul and generates suffering, either in the present life or in future births. Bad karma shows up as emotional suffering, a negative aura, disease and difficult life circumstances.

The third and highest category is nishkam karma, also known as akarma — action performed without any desire for a personal result. This is action done in the remembrance of the Supreme, with no attachment to reward or recognition. Such action does not bind the soul in any karmic bondage. It is the only kind of karma that does not add further weight to the causal body.

Bapuji says frankly that a soul truly capable of nishkam karma is extremely rare, because most human actions are driven by desire, ego, expectation or attachment. But this category exists as the highest ideal, and even partial movement toward it begins to loosen the grip of the karmic cycle.

Why Knowledge of Karma Is Essential

Bapuji repeatedly emphasises that without knowledge of the theory of karma, a soul remains blind to the meaning of its own life. With knowledge, everything takes its rightful place. A soul begins to distinguish between right and wrong action, to avoid negative deeds, to accumulate positive karmic energy, and to move consciously toward liberation. Having said that, suffering does not appear unjustified.

Without this knowledge, a soul remains trapped in the cycle of birth and death. It performs actions instinctively, without understanding their consequences, and continues to add layers of karmic bondage lifetime after lifetime. Because of this, Bapuji calls the study of karma not a philosophy but a necessity for every human being.

◆ BAPUJI INSIGHT ◆

Karma ka jo hisab-kitab hai woh sirf ek janam ki baat nahi hai, aatma anekon janam se karma bandhan mein aayi hui hai.

The account of karma is not the matter of a single life; the soul has been coming into karmic bondage across countless births.

Karma Done by the Mind Has the Deepest Impact

Bapuji makes a striking point: of all the karmas a human being performs, karma done by the mind has the deepest impact. Physical action is visible and limited; mental action is invisible and unlimited. A single negative thought can affect a person who is thousands of kilometres away, because the thought travels through vibration. Lord Krishna also said in Shri Bhagawad Gita that thinking is itself karma, and Bapuji develops this same teaching in practical terms:

the world of today is negative because the thinking of its inhabitants has become negative.

This is also why mere prayer without concentration brings little result. Bapuji points out that many people claim to worship God frequently, but during prayer their minds are wandering elsewhere. If a person spends only one percent of prayer time actually remembering God and ninety-nine percent thinking about worldly matters, the spiritual benefit becomes extremely limited. Real worship requires focused awareness, not external posture.

CHAPTER II

The Four Layers of Karma

Beyond the three quality-based categories — satya, paap, and nishkam — Bapuji describes a deeper structure of karma that explains how action accumulates, how it becomes destiny, and how it ripens over time. This structure has four layers. Each layer answers a different question about the soul's journey. Every soul with elemental body or without body accumulates these karmas. No exemptions. Together they form the complete picture of how karma functions.

1. Sanchit Karma — The Accumulated Store

Sanchit karma is the vast storehouse of all actions performed across countless past lives — knowingly and unknowingly. Every thought, every emotion, every intention, and every action ever performed by the soul has been recorded and stored. Bapuji compares it to a karmic bank, with deposits made across many births.

Just as fruits on a tree ripen at different times, the karmas stored in this bank do not all give results at once. Some remain dormant for one or multiple lifetimes, waiting for the right conditions to manifest. Others ripen quickly. This is why two children born into the same family can have entirely different fates: each brings a different portion of sanchit karma into the present life.

Physical conditions at birth — health challenges, disabilities, even special talents — are often the manifestation of sanchit karma reaching maturity at precisely that moment.

2. Prarabdha Karma — The Destiny of This Life

From the vast ocean of sanchit karma, a small portion is selected for experience in the current lifetime. This portion is called prarabdha karma, often referred to simply as destiny or fate.

Prarabdha karma determines the circumstances of birth, the major events of life, and the experiences that must be met. A child born healthy but developing illness later in life is experiencing prarabdha karma activating at a specific time. Certain joys and sorrows arrive regardless of effort because they are karmically ripe.

Bapuji is clear that prarabdha itself cannot be avoided. But our response to it is always within our control, and that is where spiritual mastery begins.

3. Kriyamān Karma — The Karma of Now

Kriyamān karma is the karma being created right now, through the free will of the present moment. These actions give immediate or near-immediate results. Speaking a harsh word creates an instant emotional reaction. Parking in a forbidden zone brings an instant fine. Every second of conscious action belongs to this layer.

Although kriyamān karma feels like complete freedom, Bapuji reminds us that it is still deeply influenced by the sanskars (impressions) of past karma. A soul rarely acts from true freedom; it usually acts from the pull of its own recorded tendencies.

Yet kriyamān karma is the most powerful layer, because it is the only one in which transformation is possible. Through meditation, self-awareness, discipline, and knowledge, a soul can begin to neutralise the negative tendencies accumulated over many lifetimes and reshape its destiny. This is the yogi's victory — responding with awareness instead of reacting automatically.

4. Āgāmi Karma — The Karma Being Created for the Future

Āgāmi karma refers to the karma being created now that will shape future experiences, whether in this life or the next. Thoughts, words, intentions, life goals — all of these shape what is to come.

A spiritual person consciously decides what kind of future karma to generate. They may resolve to live for world welfare, to no longer bind themselves to future births, to make this life their final incarnation. Such decisions, made with clarity and conviction, shape āgāmi karma and move the soul toward liberation.

◆ BAPUJI INSIGHT ◆

Aap aatma ho, shareer nahi. Karma ka rikord aatma mein padta hai — shareer toh ek madhyam hai.

*You are a soul, not a body. Karma is recorded in the soul;
the body is merely the medium.*

Why This Structure Matters

Understanding these four layers reshapes how a soul looks at its own life. The present is no longer a random outcome but the ripening of past seeds. The present is the result of past actions. The future is being created by what we do now. And true freedom becomes possible because our actions are where change and liberation begin.

CHAPTER III

Good Karma and Bad Karma: Merit, Sin and the Soul's Balance

If karma is the great spiritual law, then the reader cannot truly walk its path without understanding what separates a good action from a bad one. Bapuji speaks of this subject again and again, because the modern world has grown confused about what actually counts as sin, what actually counts as merit, and why the distinction matters at all. The quality of every karma — whether it weighs the soul down or lightens it — is the subject of this chapter.

What Sin Actually Is

Bapuji defines sin in the broadest possible way, and the definition is simple. To give sorrow to any living being — whether a human soul, an animal soul, a plant soul, or the smallest creature — is sin. To perform an action that inflicts suffering on another soul is sin. The form in which the sorrow is given does not change the nature of the act; only the weight of the karma varies.

Bapuji extends this definition beyond the obvious. To cheat someone for money is sin. To lie in a way that causes harm is sin. To refuse help when help is genuinely needed and within one's power is itself a sin, because the withholding of help when it could have been given produces sorrow in another being. The soul responsible for that sorrow has added a negative recording to its causal body, and the karma has begun its quiet work.

♦ BAPUJI INSIGHT ♦

Kisi bhi prani ko dukh dena — yahi paap ki sabse badi paribhasha hai.

To give sorrow to any living being — this is the broadest definition of sin.

Why the Record Cannot Be Hidden

Every action, good or bad, is recorded in the causal body (Karan Sharir) of the soul. When a negative action is performed, the corresponding negative record enters the karan sharir immediately. The moment a thought rises with the intent to harm, a trace has already been made.

This is why the old saying — that God sees everything — is literally true at the level of the soul. Every thought sends out a vibration, either positive or negative. That vibration spreads through the subtle atmosphere, is absorbed by the cells of the air element, and reaches every dimension through the subtle layers up to the incorporeal creator. Even the soul of the doer receives its own vibration back as a permanent impression. Nothing escapes the recording. This is the science behind the teaching that all karmas bear fruit — not one of them is ever wasted.

Even Small Beings Feel Sorrow

Bapuji reminds the reader that every living being, however small, has a soul within it. A plant, a tree, an insect has a soul. Because of this, thoughtless damage to any of them carries a karmic weight, even if the weight is light. Lord Krishna is said to have touched two particular trees at the end of his life to liberate two gandharvas who had taken birth as trees because of their own negative actions. Trees are not empty; they are souls that have fallen to a particular form because of the choices of earlier lives.

Bapuji applies this teaching to the modern world with a striking remark. Those who recklessly cut trees today, who spread pollution across the earth, will themselves take birth as trees in future lives — because the karmic law places a soul into the very form that must now repair the damage it caused. The one who polluted will be born into the condition that must cleanse the pollution.

Killing Mosquitoes, Insects and the Question of Necessity

Readers sometimes ask: is it a sin to kill a mosquito? Is it a sin to remove insects from one's home? Bapuji answers gently. In the strict sense, to kill any living being is not a good action. But in practical life, some situations demand response. A mosquito that brings disease, an insect that contaminates food — these cannot always be tolerated. The karmic weight of such actions is not zero, but it is also not comparable to the deliberate cruelty of harming another for no reason.

What Bapuji cautions against is not the unavoidable cleansing of one's home, but the larger pattern of carelessness toward all life. When a soul grows indifferent to the suffering of other beings, that indifference itself becomes a heavy karmic record. The small actions add up; the casual cruelty accumulates.

When Forceful Action Is Not a Sin

There is one important exception that Bapuji draws directly from the Gita. The stopping of a soul whose actions are bringing enormous suffering to many others — when carried out as duty — is not a sin. The soldier on the border who defends his country, the leader who takes a difficult decision in a moment of genuine dharma, acts without accumulating sin, because his action is the protection of many from the harm of a few.

Bapuji is careful, however. This exception is strictly bounded. Acting to stop a soul whose conduct is genuinely harming many others, when done as duty, is the work of dharma; the large-scale harm of innocents is never dharma, no matter how it is presented or looked at or covered up. Bapuji points to the use of weapons of mass destruction against civilian populations as a clear example. To unleash such force upon innocents is not the defence of one's own country; it is mass karma of the heaviest kind. No national flag, no claim of necessity, can convert that karma into merit.

The real work of destruction — the great dissolutions, the pralayas, the kalp pralayas by which entire creations are cleared — belongs to the Supreme. It is not the work of human hands. When human beings take such destruction into their own hands, they only become instruments of their own future suffering. The karma is never avoided; it only waits.

♦ BAPUJI INSIGHT ♦

Asuron ka nash karna paap nahi hai — par nirdosh logon ko marna, chahe kisi bhi naam par ho, sabse bada paap hai.

Stopping the wicked is not sin; but to harm the innocent, under any banner, is the gravest sin of all.

The Sin of Speech

Bapuji places great weight on the sins of speech, because speech is karma made audible. To curse casually, to abuse others in ordinary conversation, to speak ill of people behind their backs — all of these are sinful acts, even when they appear to cost nothing. When a soul thinks negatively about another, its aura turns black. The negative thought travels to the other soul and touches them; they absorb a portion of the darkness. If the thought is repeated, the connection deepens, and the one who keeps thinking about another only pulls that other soul's negativity into himself.

This is why Bapuji reminds the reader of the ancient teaching: par chintan patan ki jad hai — brooding over others is the root of the soul's downfall. A soul that spends its inner life thinking about the faults and affairs of other people steadily loses its own energy. Its aura darkens. Its sanskars worsen. Its capacity for real remembrance of the Supreme fades.

Bapuji's remedy is simple and direct. If you must think about someone, think about the Supreme. If you must remember someone, remember the Almighty Authority. Be in soul-consciousness, connect with the powerhouse through yog, and draw power from the source. Why waste your thinking on a fellow human soul when the Supreme is waiting to give you what no human can?

Collective Sin: When Nations Oppress Nations

Sin does not belong to individuals alone. Bapuji explains that when one nation oppresses another, the negative vibration rises from the entire populace and fills the atmosphere of the region. War follows — not as an accident, but as the discharge of the accumulated negativity. This is why those in positions of great authority carry a proportionally great responsibility. A king, a ruler, a leader who fails to prevent a war he could have prevented shares directly in the karma of that war.

History is full of such kings. Bapuji points to the rulers who across the ages have fought endless wars to expand their territory, killing lakhs of innocents for the sake of their own glory. In one life they were kings, commanding the deaths of multitudes. In the next life, Bapuji says plainly, such souls become beggars. From king to pauper is the karmic fall of those who misused authority. For every bullet fired, for every sword swung, a hole opens in the subtle body of the one who commanded the act. Strange, unexplained bodily afflictions in a future birth are often the surfacing of these old records.

Even Great Souls Are Not Exempt

Bapuji observes that even Rama, the Lord of Tretayug, had to live out the unfolding of certain karmic threads. Rama was sent into the forest. Sita too was sent away on the basis of a single dhobi's complaint — Lavkush were born in the ashram of Valmiki as a result. These were not minor matters. Bapuji raises the difficult question directly: why did Rama, a king, take such a decision on the basis of one person's remark, especially when his wife was carrying two children? Kings should consult their own clarity of mind before acting on the chatter of public opinion.

Some traditions trace Rama's exile to a curse given long before by Narad to Vishnu — that Vishnu too would suffer the agony of separation from his consort. Whether or not we accept this particular account, the principle Bapuji wants the reader to see is the same: even the great incarnations walk within the karmic law. No one stands above it. The law applies to all beings who take form.

The Definition of Merit

Having spoken at length about sin, Bapuji now turns to the far more important subject: punya — merit, good karma, the kind of action that lifts the soul rather than weighs it down. Many people confuse merit with simple kindness — feeding a hungry person, giving to a beggar, contributing to a temple. These are good acts, and they do carry positive weight. But Bapuji calls them had ki punya — merit of the limited world. Their fruit is limited; their reach is short.

Behad ki punya — merit of the unlimited worlds — is something else entirely. It is the kind of action that can transform not only individuals but entire multiverses. This is the merit Bapuji wants the reader to understand.

◆ BAPUJI INSIGHT ◆

Had ke karma ka had ka phal milta hai, aur behad ke karma ka behad ka phal.

Limited actions give limited fruits; unlimited actions give unlimited fruits.

The Highest Merit: Going Beyond Religion and Finding the Source

Bapuji gives a precise, unambiguous definition of the highest merit. Go beyond the boundaries of religion, caste, and creed. Search for the Almighty Authority — the true supreme creator of the infinite — and connect with Him directly. First recognise that you are a soul, not a body. Establish yourself in soul-consciousness. Draw power from the Almighty. And then, from that place of connection, spread the vibration of Paramshanti outward into the world.

This, Bapuji says, is the highest punya. To fill the atmosphere with supreme peace — to become a source of that vibration through your own inner stability — is work whose fruit reaches far beyond a single life or a single region. When even one soul holds this vibration steadily, those around begin to feel it. Homes become temples.

Regions begin to shift. This is the kind of merit that quietly transforms worlds.

The Sharing of Knowledge as Supreme Merit

Alongside the vibration of Paramshanti, Bapuji names a second form of the highest punya: the sharing of spiritual knowledge. Gyan Daan Maha Daan — sharing knowledge is the highest charity. Of all possible donations, the donation of behad gyan is supreme, because it gives the receiver the tool by which his own soul can be liberated.

To feed a hungry body is kindness. To help a soul find the path back to the Supreme is service of an entirely different order. One feeds a body that will die; the other feeds a soul that is eternal. The one who can give behad gyan to another soul — who can point them toward the Almighty Authority — performs merit of the greatest magnitude.

Bapuji adds another piece: alongside sharing knowledge, give others the experience of (Atma-swaroop) soul-consciousness. Participate in the work of world transformation by holding the resolve and sending out the vibration. These three — the spreading of Paramshanti, the sharing of behad gyan, and the helping others to experience (atma-swaroop) soul-consciousness — together form the highest punya available on earth today.

Two Categories of Good People in the World

Bapuji acknowledges that the world is full of genuinely good people. Many feed the poor, give money to those in need, care for animals, visit the sick. Such souls carry within them the natural instinct of kindness, and Bapuji does not diminish these acts. But he adds a sober observation: these good souls often do not know what more is possible. They perform had ki punya throughout their lives and never encounter the knowledge that would allow them to perform behad ki punya.

The limited merit produces a limited fruit. The soul of such a good person may reach heaven after death, enjoy its period of happiness there, and eventually return to earth as the accumulated merit exhausts. Meanwhile the opportunity for liberation passed unused. The soul was good; it simply did not know there was a higher path.

This is why Bapuji repeatedly urges the reader not to stop at the limited form of merit. Continue to be kind, yes. Continue to help. But also take the step into knowledge. Begin to connect with the Almighty Authority. Begin to spread the vibration of Paramshanti. Add behad ki punya to whatever had ki punya you are already doing, and the fruit becomes incomparable.

Why Merit Requires Spiritual Power

Bapuji makes a subtle but decisive point here. Even the intention to perform unlimited merit is not enough by itself. To truly spread the vibration of Paramshanti, the soul must itself possess the power to carry that vibration outward. A soul depleted by past lives of negativity cannot radiate what it does not hold. The vibration of supreme peace must first be received, before it can be given.

This is why the path circles back to the same place: to meditate in soul-consciousness, to connect with the Almighty Authority, to receive Param Prakash into the causal body, and only then to turn outward and share. The work of merit and the work of self-purification are not separate. One enables the other. A purified soul performs the highest merit naturally, simply by being what it is.

Pehle aatma mein param prakash bharo — phir paramshanti ka vibration duniya mein phelta
hai. Yahi sabse bada punya hai.

First fill the soul with supreme divine light — then the vibration of supreme peace spreads into the world. This is the greatest merit of all.

The Balance of the Soul

Every human soul carries, at any given moment, a running balance of merit and sin. Bapuji explains that this balance determines not only the course of the present life but the direction of the next birth. A soul whose balance has tilted heavily toward merit takes a good future birth. A soul whose balance has tilted toward sin falls into difficulty. A soul whose balance has tipped beyond all recovery descends into lower forms of life until enough of the weight has been worn through.

But Bapuji's real teaching is not about maintaining a balance. A soul that simply tries to keep the merit higher than the sin is still operating within the ordinary karmic cycle. The path Bapuji points to is different: dissolve the entire account. Let Param Prakash burn not just the sin but the very record that holds both sin and merit. When the balance is cleared altogether, the soul moves into karmatit — the state beyond accounting.

Until that final state is reached, the work of the seeker is to generate as much merit as possible, to avoid the generation of sin, and above all to add the dimension of behad ki punya that dissolves not only one's own account but also contributes to the clearing of the world. In this threefold work — reducing sin, generating limited merit, and rising into unlimited merit — every reader has a role, and every day offers the chance to walk further along it.

CHAPTER IV

Thoughts, Words and Actions

If karma is created through three channels — thought, word and action — then the science of karma must begin with a careful look at each. Bapuji gives remarkably detailed teachings on how each channel operates, and how each contributes differently to the karmic record of the soul.

The Power of Thought

Every thought, once generated, becomes a vibration. That vibration carries the power of the soul behind it. When a thought is repeated again and again, the vibration grows stronger. Negative thought creates negative vibration; positive thought creates positive vibration. The world we live in is, at the subtle level, the sum of all the vibrations humanity has created.

Bapuji explains that thoughts travel through the atmosphere. Even a thought directed at a person living far away can affect them, because the subtle world is not bounded by physical distance. In today's largely negative world, positive thoughts struggle to travel far, but negative thoughts easily cross great distances and reach their targets, setting off cascading reactions.

Why Controlling Thoughts Is So Difficult

A common teaching in modern self-help is: control your thoughts, think positively. Bapuji is blunt about this. A human being generates tens of thousands of thoughts in a single day — he mentions a figure of about sixty thousand thoughts. Controlling them all, by effort of will alone, is nearly impossible. The reason is simple: thoughts are not created from scratch each moment. They emerge from the recordings of the causal body, from the accumulated sanskars of many births.

When a soul has lived many lifetimes of negativity, its default thinking is negative. Telling such a soul to simply “think positive” is like asking a polluted spring to run clear water. The source itself must be purified. This is why Bapuji says that no motivational teaching, no positive-thinking technique, can actually work without spiritual power. The soul must be charged from a higher source — from the Almighty Authority — or the negative sanskars will overwhelm every conscious effort to change.

The Word: Karma Made Audible

A word is heavier than a thought. When a thought finds voice, it acquires outward force. It enters the world and affects others directly. Bapuji often points to an old spiritual maxim: as is the food, so is the mind; as is the water one drinks, so is one’s speech; as is the air one breathes, so are one’s thoughts. Each of the five elements carries its own influence on the channels of karma. Words are the karma of breath and air.

This is why Bapuji emphasises speaking less, speaking sweetly, and speaking slowly. A sage reduces the weight of speech-karma not only by avoiding harsh words but by reducing the total volume of unnecessary speech itself. Each word leaves a trace.

Action: The Visible Layer

Outward action is the most visible karma and the one most easily recognised by the world. Yet Bapuji reminds us that action is only the surface. Behind every action stands a word, and behind every word stands a thought. If the inner thought is impure, even a seemingly good outer action may not produce the expected result. The causal body records intention, not appearance.

This is why Bapuji points out the double standards people often live by. A person may feed ants with flour at a religious site yet destroy ant nests in his own home. A person may donate publicly to a temple while exploiting his own servants in private. The outer action cancels out against the inner reality, and the karmic account reflects the truth, not the show.

*You become what you think. You reach what you

The Three Work Together

The three channels are not independent. They form a single stream. Thought feeds word, word feeds action, and action in turn creates new thoughts. A soul seeking to purify its karma must work on all three together — silencing the noise of the mind, softening and reducing speech, and aligning action with understanding. None of these alone is sufficient; all three together begin the real work.

CHAPTER V

Where Karma Is Recorded

To understand karma, one must understand where karma is stored. Bapuji teaches that a human being has more than one body. The physical body, made of five gross elements, is the outermost form. Inside it lies the subtle body, made of three finer elements. And inside the subtle body lies the causal body, made of the ether element alone. It is the causal body — karan sharir — that carries the record of every thought, word, and action across births.

The Three Bodies

The gross body is what we see: skin, bones, organs. It is built from the five elements — earth, water, fire, air, and ether. When the body dies, the earth and water elements return to the earth through cremation; the remaining three elements travel with the soul.

The subtle body is the aura body, built from fire, air, and ether. It holds the energy of the soul and is responsible for the operation of the physical body. Colours in the aura — red, black, blue, green, golden, white — reflect the state of this subtle body at any moment.

The causal body, also called karan sharir, is the deepest layer. It is made purely of the ether element. It is the storehouse of every karmic record, the true memory of the soul. Bapuji equates the mind in its subtlest sense with the causal body: cleansing the karan sharir is the real work of controlling the mind.

Where Karma Is Recorded

Bapuji suggests to understand Karan Sharir in more depth. In an earlier book — Time Travel — Bapuji explained different higher lokas and how souls travel in different galaxies, universes, the Great Universe, and the Great Great Universe based on soul power during the dissolution stage (Ardh-Pralay, Pralay, Maha Kaal Pralay, Kalp Pralay, and so on). He has also talked about the cosmic time correlation with the soul's journey.

When our physical body, subtle body and causal body exist, then whatever actions have been performed anywhere in the Universe — whether above the Earth in the seven higher lokas or below the Earth in the lower lokas — wherever any soul goes, stays, acts, or travels, the record of all actions remains stored in the causal body.

The soul travels through many cosmic layers and carries different subtle bodies that store impressions of actions performed in those realms. When a soul takes birth and performs actions within the Brahmand — which here means the solar system — all thoughts, emotions, intentions, vibrations, and deeds become recorded inside the causal body (Karan Sharir). This causal body acts like a subtle storage field where karmic impressions are preserved. If the soul travels beyond the solar system into the Maha Brahmand — meaning the galaxy — then the karmas performed in those galactic regions are stored within a higher layer called the Maha causal body. In the same way, when the soul exists within the Param Maha Brahmand — the universe itself — the karmic records of those universal experiences are stored within an even deeper and more expansive subtle layer called the Param Maha causal body. Thus, as the soul moves through larger cosmic dimensions, the karmic recording system also expands into higher causal structures.

Bapuji teaches further that souls which originate from even greater realities beyond the known universe, referred to as Great Universe or Great Great Universe, carry even more expansive karmic layers known as Param Param Maha causal body and Param Param Param Maha causal body. These higher causal bodies preserve karmic impressions from immensely vast dimensions of existence far beyond ordinary human understanding. This is why no soul can escape its karmic account by simply changing bodies, planets, galaxies, or dimensions.

The karmic record travels with the consciousness itself. Whether the soul ascends upward, descends into lower lokas, enters another galaxy, or reincarnates on Earth, the stored vibrations remain active until purified through spiritual awakening, soul consciousness, higher knowledge and Paramshanti (supreme peace).

How Karma Is Recorded

Every thought generates a vibration in the aura. Every word adds weight to it. Every action leaves an impression on it. These impressions do not remain in the aura alone; they sink deeper, into the causal body, where they become permanent records until dissolved by spiritual power. Bapuji explains that this recording is so precise that even secret karmas — actions hidden from every human eye — are fully recorded. Vibration does not hide. It travels outward through the five-element environment, through the subtle world, through all the dimensions, and the record reaches the Supreme. Even dreams, Bapuji teaches, are partly an emergence of records from the causal body. Fear that arises in sleep, faces and scenes that appear without explanation, are often the surfacing of karmic impressions from past births being released into the conscious mind.

Instant Like and Dislike

Bapuji gives a practical example that many readers will recognise. When a stranger sits beside you on a train, one casual glance may leave you feeling drawn to them, while another stranger at the same distance may immediately feel unpleasant. You have never met either of them in this life. Why the difference?

Because the causal body has already opened its records. Within a fraction of a second, it has recognised both souls from previous lifetimes. The recordings it carries about each soul are flashed into the mind, and the mind takes a decision: liking or disliking, attraction or avoidance. This happens faster than thought. It is the causal body speaking in the language of instinct.

This same mechanism operates in relationships, in professional encounters, in chance meetings that later turn into deep connections, and in sudden aversions that cannot be explained rationally. None of it is accidental. All of it is the reading of karmic records stored across many births.

Why Forced Positive Thinking Fails

Because thoughts rise from the causal body, simply deciding to think positively does not work when the deeper records are negative. You can repeat a positive affirmation a thousand times, but the causal body will keep releasing its actual content into your conscious mind. The negativity will break through every shield built from effort alone.

This is why Bapuji insists that only spiritual power — drawn from connection with the Almighty Authority — can actually cleanse the causal body. Positive thinking by itself cannot do it. Determination by itself cannot do it. Therapy cannot do it. Only the entry of Param Prakash — supreme divine light — into the soul can dissolve the records and purify the karan sharir at its source.

CHAPTER VI

Karma and Destiny (Bhagya)

What human beings call bhagya — destiny or fate — is, according to Bapuji, nothing mysterious. It is simply the ripening of sanchit karma into the present life. Destiny is not written arbitrarily by any external hand; it is written by the soul itself, through the actions of past births. Good karma makes good destiny; bad karma makes bad destiny. Nothing more, nothing less.

How Destiny Is Set

Before a soul takes birth, the balance of its sanchit karma determines where and how it will arrive in the new life. A soul carrying a strong account of good karma takes birth in a prosperous family, with good-natured parents, brothers, sisters, grandparents. A soul carrying heavy negative karma takes birth in difficulty — poverty, conflict, or bodily deformity.

Bapuji gives a striking example. When asked how some individuals in the Arab countries become billionaires at a young age, he replies that no single life can account for such wealth. The balance of countless births of good action has concentrated into one life, bearing fruit all at once like a tree unloading every ripe fruit in a single season.

Wealth Comes and Goes According to Karma

Destiny is not frozen. A person born wealthy may lose everything if he misuses his good fortune. A person born poor may rise to abundance if he creates the right karma in the present life.

Bapuji warns against the false security of inherited wealth. A person who inherits good fortune but spends it on display, on ego, on harmful companions, uses up his karmic account quickly. Like a bank account drained by too many cheques, even the largest deposit finishes. Conversely, a person who uses wealth for the welfare of others — for donation, for service, for genuine help to the needy — continues to generate new good karma and continues to enjoy good fortune.

“Like father, like son” is an old saying, but Bapuji challenges it. If it were absolute, how could Prahlad have been born into the household of the demon king Hiranyakashyap? A powerful soul can bring its own qualities into any family. The son of a labourer can become a scholar. The daughter of a poor home can rise to high office. The DNA of the parent does not bind the destiny of a powerful soul.

Horoscopes, Planets, and Fear

Bapuji speaks directly and firmly about astrology. In ancient times, the science of astrology had real meaning because the celestial beings associated with each planet held real power. Today, he says, the spiritual influence of these planetary deities is greatly diminished; Bapuji has shared, from his meditative vision, that the energy of these celestial beings is no longer what it once was. Even in the scriptures, when Ravan once bound Saturn until Hanuman came to his rescue, it was already a sign of how little the planetary deities held over a prepared soul.

Bapuji’s advice on horoscope-based fear is simple: do not fall into it. If an astrologer tells you that at forty or fifty you will face some great misfortune, repeated thinking about that prediction may itself attract the feared outcome. Fear is a form of thought, and thought is karma. The mind that imagines disaster day after day begins to build that disaster into its aura.

The way out is not to seek a better astrologer but to connect directly with the highest authority — the Almighty Authority. When the soul draws power from the highest source, the lower authorities cannot touch it. As Bapuji expresses it: the child of the Prime Minister walks freely because his father holds the highest office. Be the child of the Almighty, and no lesser power can disturb you.

Changing Destiny

Bhagya can be changed. This is the most important promise Bapuji makes in this chapter. The change does not come through prayer alone, not through ritual, not through paying an astrologer for a solution. It comes through knowledge and spiritual practice — through taking the path of gyan marg in this very birth. When a soul learns the theory of karma, recognises its own position, and begins to meditate in connection with the Supreme, its causal body begins to be purified. Negative records dissolve. The aura changes colour from red or black toward blue, green, white, and finally golden. The destiny that would have followed from the old records no longer applies with the same force, because the records themselves have been partially burned.

This is the quiet revolution Bapuji calls self-transformation, and it is always available to any human being who chooses it.

CHAPTER VII

Body, Face, and DNA Across Births

One of the more surprising teachings in Bapuji's discourses concerns the body itself. If the soul is the same across births, why does the face change from one life to the next? Why do some souls inherit disease from their parents and others escape it? Why does a child look so little like either parent? Bapuji's answer weaves karma, DNA, and soul power into one explanation.

Why the Face Changes Every Birth

Bapuji explains that the sanchit karma of the previous life shapes the form of the next body. If the accumulated records are good, the soul receives a pleasing appearance — colour, features, height, and health all formed according to the karmic account. If the records are negative, the subtle body blackens; the aura turns dark; and the next body carries the weight of that darkness.

Bapuji gives the example of a soul who, in one life, was a celestial dancer in the realm of Indralok. When her account of good karma ripened, she took birth on earth with the beauty and talent of her previous realm, becoming a famous actress or dancer. But Bapuji adds a warning: if that same soul misuses her appearance in the current life, the next birth will be different. The aura will darken, and the body that follows will be less fortunate. The face, in other words, is a direct reading of karma.

Places of Birth Also Shift

Not only faces change — so do countries, climates, families, and even species. A soul may be born in India, then later in Africa, then later in the far subtle dimensions. Bapuji explains that where a soul takes birth depends on its karma bandhan — to whom it is karmically bound. If a soul has bound itself to demon-like souls in past births, when those souls fall to lower conditions, this soul will be pulled along. If a person keeps company with those who harm others, he shares in their future fall.

This is why Bapuji stresses the importance of choosing one's connections carefully. Bandhan is not a matter of formal relationship alone; it is a matter of soul-to-soul karmic tie. Even small bonds, repeated over many lives, decide where the soul lands in its next arrival.

DNA and Soul Power

Bapuji's teaching on DNA is particularly striking. In a family of five children, it may happen that three inherit a hereditary disease while two do not. What explains the difference? The two who escape the disease are, Bapuji says, powerful souls. They entered the body with their own DNA, and the soul's power was strong enough to override what the body would otherwise have inherited.

When a soul enters the womb at around three to four months after conception, its causal body interacts with the developing cells. A weak soul passively absorbs the parents' DNA patterns; a powerful soul actively imprints its own patterns onto the developing structure. This is why predictions based on family history often fail. A truly powerful soul does not inherit what does not belong to it.

This explains the son of a humble labourer who becomes an officer, or a child born into the simplest circumstances who becomes a sage like Sant Raidas. Bapuji references this example specifically: Sant Raidas was born into a household of very modest means and yet became a saint of such stature that the highest teachers apotheosised him. His soul carried its own category; his family did not define him.

Disease as Long-Accumulated Karma

Many diseases — especially those that arise without obvious cause and resist treatment — are, in Bapuji's teaching, the manifestation of long-accumulated karma. Cancer in particular, he says, is rarely the result of a single life. It is the accumulated darkening of subtle-body cells across many births of sinful activity. The discharged cells of the causal body affect the subtle body; the subtle body in turn affects the gross body; and what appears finally as disease is the surfacing of a record that has been building for ages.

The ordinary remedies of havan, worship, and recitation of holy books have limited effect on such deep karmic disease. What truly dissolves the record is meditation connected with the Supreme, which charges the causal body with Param Prakash and begins to burn the accumulated vikarma at the source.

CHAPTER VIII

Karma, the Five Elements, and Natural Disasters

In Bapuji's teaching, karma does not remain contained within the individual. It radiates outward, affecting the very elements that make up the natural world. The five elements — earth, water, fire, air, and ether — respond to human vibrations. When human thought becomes negative on a mass scale, the elements themselves become disturbed. What follows is what modern language calls a natural disaster, but what Bapuji reveals to be a karmic consequence.

The Five Elements and Human Thought

Bapuji explains that each of the five elements carries a different relationship with the channels of karma. Food, grown from the earth element, shapes the quality of the mind. Water, when drunk in a certain quality, shapes speech. Air, when breathed in a certain quality, shapes thought. The three are connected: purify what you eat, drink, and breathe, and the mind, speech, and thought begin to clear.

Ether, the most subtle element, carries the record of everything. Bapuji compares it to what modern science calls dark energy — invisible, pervasive, present in every corner of space. Every thought generated anywhere in the world leaves an impression on the ether; and from the ether, it passes into the air, the fire, the water, and finally the earth.

The physical world is never separate from the vibrational world; one continuously shapes the other.

Why Negative Collective Thought Causes Cyclones and Earthquakes

When the thoughts of thousands or millions of people in a given region turn negative, the air in that region fills with negativity. Over time, this negativity does not remain silent. It seeks discharge. Bapuji explains that natural disasters — cyclones, earthquakes, floods — often occur precisely in regions where collective thinking has become especially disturbed. The five elements, being responsive to human vibration, lose their natural balance and erupt.

This is not a simple one-to-one rule; not every disturbance leads immediately to disaster, and not every disaster can be traced to a single negative cause. But the pattern is there, and Bapuji urges humanity to see it. A region in which people hate one another, compete without ethics, and live in chronic negativity builds its own karmic storm. Sooner or later the storm arrives.

The Quality of Food, Water, and Air

From this teaching, Bapuji draws a practical conclusion. As the food, so the mind. As the water, so the speech. As the air, so the thought. A soul that takes pure vegetarian food, drinks clean water, and lives in clean air gives itself the natural basis for a clearer mind, cleaner speech, and purer thought. Non-vegetarian food, especially food that carries the energy of violence and fear from the slaughtered animal, pulls the mind in the opposite direction.

Bapuji explains, from this energy perspective, that those committed to the highest spiritual progress generally find sattvic vegetarian food most supportive. He does not insist on the practice as a ritual or a rule; he presents it as a matter of subtle energy. The basis of the mind is food, and food is part of karma. Every seeker is encouraged to reflect on this principle according to his or her own tradition and inner guidance.

The Temple Within

When speech, thought, and action begin to align with purity, Bapuji says the home itself becomes a temple. First the individual changes. Then the family changes. Then the surroundings change. Vibrations of peace begin to spread outward and, over time, they touch whole neighbourhoods and regions. This is not mysticism; it is the same law of karma operating in reverse. Negative thought disturbs the elements; positive thought restores them.

This is why Bapuji considers self-transformation and world transformation to be the same work. The world is only the sum of its souls. A changed individual changes a family; changed families change a society; changed societies change a world. The five elements respond accordingly.

◆ BAPUJI INSIGHT ◆

Prakriti insaan ke man ke aadhaar par chalti hai. Man badlega, vayumandal badlega, panch tatva badlenge.

Nature follows the mind of humanity. When the mind changes, the atmosphere changes, and the five elements themselves change.

CHAPTER IX

Wars, Religion and Collective Karma

If individual karma shapes individual destiny, then collective karma shapes the destiny of nations and entire civilisations. Bapuji teaches that wars are not random political accidents. They are the manifestation of accumulated negativity in the souls of millions, sometimes built up across thousands of years.

The Origin of War

Bapuji explains that the conflict between devta (deities) and asur (demonic souls) is ancient. Both have arrived from outer dimensions and continue to clash on earth. When followers of one group come into contact with followers of the other, what unfolds is not merely a political dispute but a dharmayudh — a battle of religions, a struggle between positive and negative forces. In reality, those who fight to prove the supremacy of their religion are themselves doing adharma, because their actions release destructive vibrations into the world.

Bapuji traces this pattern back to the ancient yugas. In Tretayug, Rama fought Ravan. In Dwaparyug, the Mahabharata battle was fought. Even in Satyug there were conflicts between the great asuras and the deities. The gods themselves, in heaven, were repeatedly harassed by the asuras, who at certain periods even ruled swargalok. The pattern is consistent: wherever negative thinking accumulates, war eventually follows.

Religion as a Cause of War

Bapuji speaks plainly about the misuse of religion. Originally, only Shiva was worshipped on the earth. Even Lord Rama, the central figure of the Tretayug, worshipped Shiva in the form of a Shivling. From the Dwaparyug onward, religion split. Some followed Shiva, others followed Vishnu. The clash between Shaivites and Vaishnavites went on for hundreds of thousands of years before later teachers had to remind both sides that Shiva and Vishnu were not different.

In Bapuji's words, two children of the same father were fighting to prove which father was superior — while in reality they were brothers. The same story has been repeated across every religion that has ever appeared on earth. Each generation forgets the unity at the source and inherits only the divisions.

The Trap of Forced Conversion

Bapuji highlights the unrighteousness done historically in the name of religion. The forced conversion of one community to another, the oppression carried out under religious banners, the harm inflicted upon those who refused to change their belief — such acts, wherever and by whomever they have occurred across human history, create vast collective karma that does not vanish with a single generation. The vibrations of those acts remain in the atmosphere, in the very dust of the regions where they occurred, and continue to influence the souls who later live there.

This is why a region cannot easily heal from a long history of religious violence. The five elements themselves carry the recordings. Only sustained vibration of peace, generated by enough souls aware of the truth, can begin to clear the field.

The Collective Vibration

Just as one negative thought of one individual creates a vibration, the negative thoughts of millions create a tidal wave. Bapuji teaches that whenever collective thought is sustained in the direction of conflict or destruction over long periods of time, the energy released into the atmosphere eventually returns to the world in physical form. This is a universal spiritual principle, not a comment on the specific causes of any particular historical event. Whatever the conscious intention of those generating such collective energy, the vibration they send out shapes what eventually returns.

This insight is not a political claim; it is a karmic teaching. Energy obeys the direction it is given. A meditation rooted in the language of destruction releases destructive vibration; a meditation rooted in the language of supreme peace releases peaceful vibration. The careful choice of what we even silently affirm to ourselves is itself a karmic act of enormous consequence.

◆ BAPUJI INSIGHT ◆

Jo log vinash ki baat karte hain, woh khud bhi

*Those who speak the language of destruction also draw

The Way Forward

Bapuji's remedy for the collective karma of war is not new doctrine but new vibration. The world will not be transformed by another argument between religions, nor by another military victory of one side over another. It will be transformed when enough souls go beyond religion, caste, and creed; recognise that the creator of the entire infinite world is one; and meditate steadily in connection with that one Almighty Authority.

The Almighty Authority, Bapuji has said clearly, will not allow a third world war to engulf the planet. The transformation of this world is to be carried out not through annihilation but through peaceful change. For this work, certain souls are being prepared as instruments — the seed souls who will channel divine power for global parivartan. Each individual who participates in this vibration adds weight to the change.

CHAPTER X

Decline of Consciousness Through the Yugas

To understand why the world feels so heavy today, Bapuji takes the reader into the long arc of cosmic time. The earth has not always carried the burden it carries now. The decline of human consciousness has occurred gradually, through four great ages — the yugas — and the karma of each age has shaped the soul-quality of the next.

The Four Yugas

The first age is Satyug — the Golden Age. In Satyug, human souls were satopradhan, meaning of the highest purity. Their thoughts were positive, their actions were aligned with truth, their auras radiated golden cosmic. Because the inner world of humanity was in harmony, the five elements of the outer world were also in harmony. Natural disasters did not occur in Satyug. Disease was rare. Life was long. The deity-like nature of human beings expressed itself naturally.

Then came Tretayug. Negative thoughts began to appear. The unity of religion began to crack. The force of rajas — passion and acquisition — entered the human mind. This was still a great age, but no longer perfect.

After Treta came Dwaparyug, in which divisions in religion began to harden. People worshipped different deities and began fighting over the supremacy of their chosen forms. The atmosphere thickened with the weight of these conflicts.

And finally came Kalyug, the present age — the age of tamopradhan or maximum impurity. Countless religions, countless gods, countless beliefs, countless quarrels. The aura of humanity has darkened. The atmosphere of the planet has filled with negative vibration.

Why This Decline Happened

Bapuji explains the descent in terms of soul power. As souls took birth after birth in conditions of increasing negativity, their accumulated vikarma weighed them down. The fine soul that once existed in luminous bodies of supreme elements gradually descended into bodies of three elements (deity forms), then into bodies of five elements (human forms), and in many cases further still into animal and lower forms when the soul lost too much of its energy.

The same soul that once danced in the higher realms could, after enough wrong choices, find itself reborn as an insect or worm. Bapuji cites the scripture's own words: even Indra, the king of heaven, has at times taken birth as a worm of hell. No position is permanent if the karmic basis of it has been used up.

The Five Elements Have Also Declined

As human consciousness fell, the elements themselves declined in quality. The water of Satyug was different from the water of today. The air, the food, the very earth carried different vibrations. In Satyug, the elements supported life effortlessly because human thought supported the elements. In Kalyug, the elements have become contaminated, because human thought is contaminated.

This is why ancient practices that once produced great spiritual results may produce only modest results today. The same effort, in a different elemental atmosphere, gives a different return. It is not that the practice has weakened; it is that the medium through which the practice operates has become heavy.

Hope Within the Decline

Despite the heaviness of the present age, Bapuji insists that this is precisely the moment of greatest opportunity. The world is on the threshold of transformation. The very fact that knowledge of this depth is now being shared — knowledge of the multiverse, of the supreme creators, of the path back to Paramdham — is a sign that the cycle is about to turn.

A soul that awakens in Kalyug and connects with the highest authority does not have to wait for the next Satyug to live in its quality. It can begin to embody Satyug-like consciousness right now. And as such souls multiply, the collective vibration begins to shift. The new age does not arrive through external destruction; it arrives through internal renewal in enough individuals.

While the soul remained in supreme purity, no natural disaster touched the earth. Today, even nature has been weighed down under the burden of the human mind.

CHAPTER XI

Mind, Intellect, Sanskar and Aura

Bapuji uses four words again and again when speaking of the inner life: man (mind), buddhi (intellect), sanskar (character or impression), and aura. These four are not separate organs. They are layers of the same inner system, and each one operates within the next. Understanding their relationship makes it possible to see why human behaviour follows the patterns it does, and why real change must reach the deepest of these layers.

The Layered Structure

Bapuji teaches that man operates inside buddhi, and buddhi operates inside sanskar. Mind throws up thoughts; intellect filters and decides; sanskar provides the underlying tendency from which both arise.

Sanskar is the deepest layer. It is the accumulated character of the soul, formed across many births. A soul whose sanskar is angry will produce angry thoughts even when nothing in the present moment justifies anger. A soul whose sanskar is peaceful will return to peace even after disturbance. The intellect can resist a tendency for a while, but if the underlying sanskar is unchanged, the tendency will eventually win.

This is why simply telling a person to behave better often fails. The instruction reaches the intellect, which agrees in principle, but the sanskar continues to drive the actual behaviour. True change requires reaching down into sanskar itself.

The Aura: Visible Sign of the Inner State

Around every human being, Bapuji explains, there is an aura — a subtle energy field generated by the state of the soul. The aura has colour, and the colour reflects the inner state at any moment.

A short-tempered person carries a red aura. The redness is not metaphor; it is a real vibration that affects everyone in the vicinity. People sitting near such a person can spend hours trying to calm down after a single outburst, because the red aura has touched them too.

A person filled with negative thinking carries a black aura. The blackness absorbs more black cosmic from the environment, deepening itself. A peaceful person carries a white aura; a person of high spiritual practice may carry a golden aura. The aura colours change with the changing state of the inner life.

Through forgiveness and meditation, Bapuji teaches, the aura can be transformed gradually — from black, through blue, then green, then white. Each colour change corresponds to a real change in the soul's vibration.

Cosmic Energy and the Aura

The aura does not only emit energy; it also absorbs. A negative aura attracts the corresponding negative cosmic from the surrounding environment, which then deepens its own negativity. A positive aura draws golden cosmic, which strengthens its own positivity. This explains why a person stuck in negative thinking finds it so difficult to escape: every breath he takes contains the very vibration that reinforces his condition.

The implication is severe: in today's atmosphere, ninety-nine percent of the cosmic vibration is negative. Only one percent, perhaps, is the golden cosmic that supports a soul's upward movement. Trying to transform oneself by pulling more golden cosmic from the surrounding atmosphere is therefore a slow and painful process. The far better path is to bypass the surrounding atmosphere entirely and connect directly with the Almighty Authority. A direct connection brings supreme light into the soul without needing to filter it from a polluted environment.

Why Saints Lived in Caves

Bapuji explains that the great saints and sages of ancient times withdrew to mountain caves not because they hated the world but because they understood the science of the aura. When two souls meet, their auras overlap. If one carries great power and the other is filled with negativity, the powerful soul's energy begins to transfer into the weaker one. Over many such encounters, the powerful soul depletes its accumulated tapasya.

This is why the real sages remained in solitude. They protected their auras by avoiding contact with negative souls. The fake sages of today — those seen in public, getting angry, performing for crowds — are not the real ones. The real ones are silent, hidden, and almost never visible to the world.

♦ BAPUJI INSIGHT ♦

Aura ka rang mann ki sthiti dikhata hai. Mann shaant hai toh aura safed banta hai; mann krodhit hai toh aura laal ho jaata hai.

The colour of the aura reveals the state of the mind. A peaceful mind makes the aura white; an angry mind turns it red.

Sealing the Aura

Bapuji teaches a practical technique: seal the aura. He himself, as he has explained, keeps his aura sealed so that he is not affected by the constant flood of incoming thoughts and vibrations from those around him. Without such sealing, no spiritual practice in a negative atmosphere can hold.

Sealing the aura is not a complicated ritual. It comes naturally with the practice of soul consciousness, with sustained connection to the Almighty Authority, and with reduction of unnecessary contact with negativity. As the soul becomes anchored in its higher source, its aura strengthens, and the noise of the surrounding world no longer penetrates as easily.

CHAPTER XII

Law of Attraction and the Theory of Karma

In the modern age, a great deal has been written and filmed about the so-called Law of Attraction — the idea that you become what you think, that the universe will give you whatever you ask for, that thoughts alone create reality. Bapuji has spoken in detail about this idea and has shown clearly where it succeeds, where it fails, and why it cannot stand on its own without spiritual knowledge.

Where the Idea Succeeds

Bapuji does not reject the basic principle. He acknowledges that, to a real extent, you become what you think about. Lord Krishna himself has said in the Gita: whomever you remember, you reach. Whatever you think of repeatedly, you inherit those qualities. If you remember a lustful person, you receive the quality of lust. If you remember an angry person, you receive the quality of anger. If you remember the Almighty Authority, you receive divine power.

In this sense, the Law of Attraction is genuine. The soul becomes what it dwells on. But Bapuji immediately points out a question that the popular teaching never asks: from where does the power of thinking come?

Where the Idea Fails

Bapuji is direct. A poor man who thinks day and night about becoming rich does not become rich. A beggar who thinks day and night about a great house does not get one. A patient who thinks himself healthy does not always heal. A family that prays for years that their son will become a doctor often watches him fail. If thought alone could create reality, none of this would happen.

The reason is that the soul itself is powerless. Without spiritual power behind the thought, the thought is empty noise. A thought is a vibration; but a vibration without power behind it cannot create. The Law of Attraction, taught without the understanding of spiritual power and the theory of karma, is therefore simply a way of fooling people.

The Karma Behind Every Outcome

Bapuji asks the reader to think about the example of a person who claims he attracted his accident. This is not how karma works. A person did not attract an accident; his own past karma brought it to him. A person did not attract wealth purely by visualisation; the ripening of his good karma made him wealthy. The popular teaching treats outcomes as if they were independent of karma. They are not. Every outcome traces back to the karmic record.

Bapuji also questions the central practice of the popular teaching: ask from the universe. Which universe? Bapuji asks. Our universe is twelve thousand billion light years across. There are infinite universes. There are infinite multiverses. To which universe is one supposed to address one's prayer? And to which deity in this vast cosmos? On the earth alone there are millions of gods and goddesses being worshipped. With so many already being prayed to, why is the world still sad and unhappy? Because most of these deities themselves no longer carry the power they once did.

The 60,000 Thoughts Problem

Bapuji raises another devastating point. A human being generates roughly sixty thousand thoughts per day. Most arise from the recordings of the causal body, from sanskars accumulated over many births. The conscious mind has very little control over which thoughts surface. Telling a soul filled with negative recordings to think positively is like asking a polluted spring to run clear water by deciding to.

Real positive thinking requires a real change in the source. The source is the soul itself, and the source can only be cleansed by Param Prakash — supreme divine light — drawn from the Almighty Authority through meditation. Without that, all thinking will eventually default to the deepest sanskar.

Placebo, Coincidence, and Selective Storytelling

When the popular teaching shows a man who became rich after visualising a hundred-thousand-dollar bill, or a woman who recovered from cancer by watching comedy films, Bapuji invites a sober look. One person in a million may have a coincidence; one person's karma may have ripened in their favour just as they happened to be following the technique. But the millions of others who tried the same technique and failed are never shown. The film features the success story; it forgets the silent multitude of failures.

If positive thinking alone cured cancer, hospitals would only show comedy films. They do not, because in clinical reality the technique works for a few and fails for most. The few who succeed have karmic accounts that allowed it; the many who fail have karmic accounts that did not.

The True Path

Bapuji is not asking the reader to give up the hope that thinking can change life. He is asking the reader to ground that hope in a deeper foundation. First, accept the theory of karma and reincarnation. Without these, no spiritual law can be understood. Second, recognise that destiny was created by past karma and can only be changed by present karma combined with spiritual power. Third, learn to meditate in true soul-consciousness, connecting with the Almighty Authority — not with the abstract “universe” and not with deities who have themselves descended.

In that connection, the soul receives Param Prakash. The causal body is charged. Vikarma begins to dissolve. Sanskars begin to change. Thought, no longer pulled down by negative recordings, begins to align with the highest. And then, slowly, the soul does indeed become what it thinks — because what it thinks is now rooted in spiritual power.

CHAPTER XIII

The Art of Forgiveness

Of all the practices that dissolve karma, forgiveness stands among the most powerful. But Bapuji is careful to distinguish between true forgiveness and the polite, surface-level forgiveness that most people offer. True forgiveness reaches down into the karmic structure itself. False forgiveness merely pauses the conflict for a moment before it returns.

Two Categories of Forgiveness

Bapuji says that to seek forgiveness is a great thing, and to grant forgiveness is greater still. People do forgive small mistakes easily, but the real test comes with grave wrongs. If someone has murdered a beloved relative, can his family truly forgive? In today's world, the immediate response is to seek revenge, and the cycle of hatred is carried on for generations.

Yet there are a few souls in this world who can forgive even the gravest wrongs. They are not weak; they are not cowards. They have, through countless births of meditation and tapasya, developed the quality of forgiveness as part of their very being. To them, forgiveness comes naturally even when the world expects vengeance.

Why True Forgiveness Is Rare

Bapuji explains why most people cannot forgive deep wrongs. When the offender appears in front of the victim, the recordings of past offences flash up from the causal body in an instant. The mind reads those recordings and decides: I cannot forgive. The first impulse is always resistance, even in a great soul. What separates the great soul from the ordinary one is what happens next.

The great soul does not act on the first impulse. He thinks beyond it. He recalls the theory of karma. He understands that whatever happened, happened because of the karmic bondage between the two souls. He sees that the karma was not the offender's alone; it was a shared account ripening at the appointed time. With this understanding, he chooses to forgive — not because the offence was small, but because revenge would only deepen the bondage.

How Forgiveness Dissolves Karma

When forgiveness is offered, the karmic bondage between the two souls begins to dissolve. The forgiven soul, often in deep repentance, begins to settle the negative account through inner change. The forgiving soul, freed from the weight of grievance, finds peace in the mind, and his aura begins to shift. The black aura of unresolved anger gives way slowly to blue, then green, then white. The mind's speed reduces. Peace settles.

And often, between two souls who have truly forgiven each other, mutual love eventually develops. Where there was hatred, affection arises. Where there was conflict, harmony grows. This is not sentiment; this is the natural movement of energy when the karmic knot is untied.

The False Forms of Forgiveness

Bapuji names several false forms of forgiveness that look like the real thing but are not.

There is forgiveness from helplessness: a person forgives because he has no power to take revenge. This is not freedom; it is suppression. The mind continues to brood. The grievance remains active inside, and the karmic bondage is not dissolved.

There is forgiveness from greed: a person forgives because he expects something from the offender, perhaps a favour or material help. This is a transaction, not forgiveness. The karmic record continues unchanged.

There is forgiveness from fear: a person forgives because he is afraid of further harm. The aura still carries the wound; the soul still carries the bondage.

Only the forgiveness offered without expectation, without fear, and without inducement — the forgiveness given simply because it is the right action of a great soul — actually dissolves the karmic knot.

Silence Is Not Always Forgiveness

Bapuji distinguishes carefully between two kinds of silence. There is the silence of a powerful person standing before a stronger one, swallowing his words by force. This is suppression, not peace. The moment the situation changes, all the unspoken words come pouring out, often more violently than they would have at the time.

And there is the silence of a knowledgeable soul who has accepted whatever happened, who has no desire to retaliate, whose mind is genuinely at rest. This silence is real peace. It carries vibration; the suppressed silence carries only tension.

Maafi maangne se aadmi chhota nahi banta, aur
maaf karne se uska aatma bahut bada ho jaata

A person is not made small by seeking forgiveness, and by granting it, his soul becomes greatly enlarged.

Forgiveness as a Path to Higher Realms

A soul that has not learned to forgive cannot rise to higher dimensions. Bapuji teaches that for soul-knowledge and soul-peace, the practice of forgiveness is essential. If a soul carries unresolved grievance, the weight of it prevents ascent. If a soul is filled with revenge at the moment of death, it does not move upward into the higher realms; it remains close to earth, often becoming a ghost-like entity following its enemy across lifetimes.

By contrast, the knowledgeable soul knows that whatever has come is the result of past karma. It does not retaliate. Even in the face of attack, it remains calm, in remembrance of the Supreme. Its positive vibrations spread, and often the person who came to harm bows down and leaves. This is not weakness; this is the quiet strength of a soul prepared for higher realms.

CHAPTER XIV

Curses, Revenge, and Generational Karma

Where forgiveness opens the path upward, curses and revenge close it. Bapuji teaches that these two forces — the curse from a powerful soul and the cycle of revenge between ordinary souls — carry consequences that can extend across generations and even across many births.

The Cycle of Revenge

When one soul kills another, the killed soul often does not pass peacefully into the higher realms. Filled with anger at the moment of death, it remains close to earth in a body of three elements, waiting for the chance to take revenge. Bapuji explains that such a soul may even enter another body to act through it, completing the cycle of killing. The two souls then bind each other in a chain that does not end with one death.

Across births, they continue to find each other. The killer and the victim trade roles, life after life, neither willing to release the bondage. The soul's energy is steadily drained by this cycle. What was once a powerful soul becomes weak; what was weak becomes negative; what was negative descends toward the demonic. Eventually such souls begin worshipping demons themselves — a sign that they have crossed over fully into the dark category.

Bapuji notes plainly: revenge is the sign of weakness. The souls that seek revenge are the ones whose power is already low. A truly powerful soul has no need to retaliate, because retaliation would reduce its power further.

Souls That Become Ghosts

Bapuji explains a specific consequence of unresolved revenge. The soul that does not forgive at the time of death often does not reincarnate at all in the normal way. It roams as a ghost or spirit, hunting down those it perceives as enemies. Films sometimes show stories of such souls. While much of the dramatisation is fictional, the underlying principle is real: a soul that leaves the body filled with revenge does not move upward.

And not only does it not move upward; it is also unable to complete its own evolution. Trapped in the lower vibration of revenge, it spends decades or even centuries in subtle states of misery before its energy finally allows another birth. Even then, the new birth often comes in difficulty.

The Power of a Curse

A curse is something different from ordinary anger. A curse pronounced by a soul with great spiritual power carries that power into the cursed person. Bapuji gives the example from the scriptures of Kapil Muni, the great sage who once cursed the hundred sons of the ocean and burned them to ashes. Many later kings tried to undo this curse. Eventually King Bhagirath brought the river Ganga down to earth, and only when the waters of Ganga touched the ashes were those souls reanimated.

Bapuji also references the curse on the moon by Daksha Prajapati. Under that curse, the moon's body burned from within. The remedy was the building of the Somnath Shivling and prolonged rigorous meditation. Even the moon, a celestial entity, required vast effort to recover from the curse of a single powerful soul.

The Cost of Cursing

Yet Bapuji is also clear that the act of cursing is itself a great loss for the one who curses. When a sage becomes angry to the point of cursing, his entire causal body is burned by the heat of his anger. The accumulated spiritual practice of many years — sometimes of many births — is wasted in a single moment. Anger is the biggest sign of incompleteness, and the curse, however justified it may appear, costs its giver dearly.

This is why the real saints — those who live in mountain caves in deep meditation — almost never curse. The figures one sometimes sees in public who get angry easily and pronounce judgements upon others are usually not the great sages. The real ones are silent, hidden, and reluctant to release their power in this way.

The Effect on the Cursed

When a curse from a powerful soul lands on someone, the negative energy enters the causal body of the cursed person and damages it severely. If the curse is heavy and the giver is very powerful, an entire generation can be affected. The descendants of the cursed person inherit, through DNA and through the family's collective causal vibration, a portion of the burden. Sometimes many births of repentance are required before the karmic load is cleared.

This is why Bapuji urges the reader: never do a deed that would invite a curse. Think before doing anything. A knowledgeable soul thinks before he thinks, because karma can be created even at the level of thought. To trouble a great soul, to cause real pain to someone with spiritual power, is to invite a karmic burden of unimaginable weight. Stay away from those whose anger could destroy you.

Krodh karne se anekon janmon ki tapasya ek pal mein bhasm ho jaati hai.

By a single act of anger, the tapasya of countless lives is reduced to ash in a moment.

The cycle of revenge and curse can only be broken by the introduction of a new force — the force of forgiveness rooted in knowledge, supported by spiritual power. A soul that understands the theory of karma chooses not to retaliate. A soul that has connected with the Almighty Authority has the inner strength to maintain that choice. Across one or two lives of such practice, the karmic chain begins to dissolve, and souls who once hunted each other across centuries can finally part.

CHAPTER XV

Pratikraman and Its Limits

In Jain philosophy and in some other traditions, the practice of pratikraman — the repeated seeking of forgiveness for every misstep — is offered as a way to dissolve sins. A practitioner is taught to apologise constantly, mentally and outwardly, for every error of thought, word, or action. Bapuji has been asked directly about this practice, and his answer is illuminating.

The Original Meaning

Pratikraman, in its original sense, means: wherever a mistake has been made, ask forgiveness from the soul concerned. If a negative thought arose toward someone, mentally tell that soul — a negative resolve passed through me toward you, please forgive me. If an action was wrongly done, name it and apologise. The practitioner moves through the day this way, continually noticing and continually apologising.

Why It Brings Only Temporary Relief

Bapuji acknowledges the practice has value. Apologising sincerely does bring some relief. The mind feels lightened. The other soul, if able to receive the apology, may forgive, and a small amount of the karmic load may be eased. This is not nothing.

But Bapuji is honest about the limits. A human being makes mistakes at every step — in mind, in speech, in action — and at every level. If one were to truly apologise for every mistake, the entire life would pass in apology. Yet even after a lifetime of pratikraman, the soul itself does not gain power. The accumulated vikarma stored in the causal body across countless previous births remains untouched.

The pratikraman addresses surface-level karma in this single life. The deeper karmic bondage — the long history of births in which the soul has been bound to other souls in ways it does not even remember — cannot be reached by apology alone. That bondage will, whether the soul wishes it or not, force further sinful actions in this life and in lives to come, because the underlying record is not dissolved.

Why Apology Alone Cannot Empower the Soul

Bapuji puts the question simply. Suppose someone forgives you. Does that automatically put power into your soul? Suppose someone gives you their blessing. Does the blessing alone empower you?

The answer depends entirely on the spiritual condition of the one offering the blessing. In ancient times, when the elders carried real spiritual power in their auras, children would touch their feet and receive genuine vibration of blessing. The aura of the elder filled the aura of the child, and real positive energy was transferred. Today, when most people's auras are themselves negative or red, taking blessing from such a person can transfer their negativity onto you, not bless you.

Likewise, the forgiveness one receives carries the power of the forgiver. If the forgiver has no power, the forgiveness is only a kind word, not a karmic event. The accumulated record in your causal body remains as it was.

What Actually Dissolves Vikarma

Bapuji returns again to the only true remedy. To dissolve the recorded vikarma in the causal body, the soul itself must receive Param Prakash — supreme divine light — from the Almighty Authority. This is not an addition to pratikraman; it is the actual mechanism of cleansing.

When the soul, established in soul-consciousness, connects through meditation with the Almighty Authority, the supreme light begins to flow into it. That light enters the causal body and burns the recordings of negative karma. It does what no apology and no blessing from another human soul can do. The soul's sanskars begin to change at the deepest level, the aura becomes white, the attitude becomes one of natural compassion, and the karmic load truly begins to lift.

Apology brings temporary peace; but real power enters the soul only through supreme divine light.

The Place of Pratikraman

Bapuji is not telling the reader to abandon pratikraman. The practice of acknowledging one's mistakes, especially toward those one has wronged in this very life, has its place. It softens the ego. It begins the work of looking at oneself honestly. In some cases, it may help dissolve smaller karmic bondages of the present life.

But pratikraman cannot be the whole path. By itself, it leaves the deepest layers untouched. A soul that wishes to truly free itself from the burden of karma must add to the practice of apology the practice of meditation in connection with the Supreme. Without the supreme light, no apology can reach the causal body where the deepest records lie.

CHAPTER XVI

Nishkam Karma and Karma Yog

If satya karma binds the soul to heaven and paap karma binds it to hell, then there is one path of action that does not bind the soul at all. Bapuji calls it nishkam karma — desireless action — and the one who walks it is the karma yogi, the yogi of action. This is the highest kind of action a human being can perform.

What Nishkam Karma Means

Nishkam karma is action carried out without desire for personal result. The work is done with full attention and skill, but the doer remains unattached to what comes back. He performs his duty because it is his duty, not because of what he expects to gain. He acts in the world without being entangled by the world.

Bapuji explains that the central condition of nishkam karma is the remembrance of the Supreme. Action performed in remembrance of the Almighty Authority does not create karmic bondage, because the doer is not the small self acting from desire — the doer is the soul connected to its source, performing through that connection. The action passes through the body, but the soul remains in its higher state and gains rather than loses energy.

The Verse from the Gita

Lord Krishna declared in the Gita: do your best work in my remembrance. Whatever is done in remembrance of me becomes desireless action. Bapuji takes this verse not as poetry but as instruction. To act in the world while remembering the Supreme — to drive a vehicle, to write a report, to cook a meal, to raise a child, all while keeping the inner connection alive — is to convert ordinary daily life into spiritual practice.

The Gita also says: I am not attainable through jap, tap, dhyān, and yog alone — I am attainable through gyān. Bapuji draws attention to this carefully. Knowledge comes first. Without knowing who the Supreme actually is, all the recitation, austerity, and meditation in the world will not establish the real connection. With knowledge, even ordinary action becomes yog.

Why Most Action Binds

Bapuji explains why almost all human action creates karmic bondage. Most action is driven by one of five forces: lust, anger, greed, attachment, or ego. Even what looks like good action may be performed for recognition, for return, or for the satisfaction of pride. Such action carries the doer's desire embedded within it. The desire becomes the karmic seed, and the soul is bound by the seed it has sown.

Even satya karma — outwardly good action — binds the soul to the cycle of birth and death. A person who performs many good actions takes birth in heaven, enjoys the reward, exhausts the merit, and then must take human birth again to begin the cycle anew. Heaven is not liberation. The pleasure-seeking deities of heaven, Bapuji teaches, eventually lose their power and fall back to earth.

Only nishkam karma — action without the seed of personal desire — escapes this binding. It produces no return that traps the soul. The soul moves through the world without accumulating, and over time it becomes light enough to rise.

The Rarity and Possibility of Nishkam Karma

Bapuji acknowledges plainly: a soul truly capable of nishkam karma is rare. Most people, even when they wish to act selflessly, find some thread of desire creeping in. This is not a moral failing; it is simply the weight of the sanskars accumulated over many births.

Yet the practice can be approached. As the soul gains knowledge and begins to meditate, the grip of desire loosens. The five vices begin to weaken. Action begins to feel cleaner, lighter, more direct. The doer notices that he is acting more often from a place of stillness rather than from a place of want. This is the gradual emergence of the karma yogi.

♦ BAPUJI INSIGHT ♦

Karm karte hue Almighty Authority ko yaad karo
— woh karm bandhan nahi banayega.

Perform action while remembering the Almighty Authority — such action will not create karmic bondage.

Eighteen Forms of Yog

Bapuji has mentioned that there are eighteen forms of yog with the Supreme. Among them is prem yog — the yog of love. A soul that knows the Supreme and loves the Supreme inherits the qualities of the Supreme. Such a soul becomes an ocean of kindness. He loves the whole world even when the world does not love him in return.

This is the high form of nishkam karma: action performed not only without desire for return but with positive love for everyone, including those who oppose the doer. The world may give back rejection, criticism, or harm. The karma yogi continues, untouched, because his connection is not with the world but with the source of all worlds.

CHAPTER XVII

Wealth, Donation, and Blessings

Karma operates not only in deeds and thoughts but also in money and gifts. Bapuji has spoken in detail about wealth, donation, blessings, and the spiritual quality of religious places. His teachings on these matters cut through several popular beliefs that are widely accepted but, on closer examination, do not stand up.

Asuri Lakshmi and Devi Lakshmi

Bapuji distinguishes between two kinds of wealth: asuri lakshmi, the wealth of negative origin, and devi lakshmi, the wealth of dharmic origin. The popular teaching today is that one can transform asuri lakshmi into devi lakshmi simply by donating ten percent of it to a religious or charitable cause. Bapuji rejects this idea.

Wealth earned by sinful action does not become pure simply by being partially given away. The wealth carries the vibration of how it was earned. A donation taken from such wealth does not transform the original sin; it spreads the contamination further. Bapuji observes plainly that much of the money flowing into large-scale public donation today carries the vibration of how it was originally earned. Those paying honest tax and living simply rarely have great surplus to give; those handling vast undocumented funds often have the most to put into grand public displays of charity.

To Whom Should One Give

Bapuji urges the reader to think carefully about where charity is directed. If you donate to a person who uses the gift for liquor or sinful action, you share in the sin. The negativity of the receiver becomes part of your account. To support a Ravan-like soul is to become like him.

Real donation goes to those who genuinely need help and will use it well. Bapuji praises the example of those who go directly to areas of real poverty and feed the genuinely hungry, rather than directing all giving toward large public gatherings where many attend for material reasons rather than genuine spiritual seeking. Service to the genuinely needy is real seva. Giving to those who only appear to be in need, while ignoring genuine suffering, is virtue only in appearance.

Bapuji also notes that donating spiritual knowledge to those who can receive and follow it is the highest form of giving — the principle of Gyan Daan Maha Daan. To put a sword of knowledge into the hand of a soul ready to use it is to do more than any quantity of food or money could accomplish.

The Limits of Blessings

In ancient times, when elders carried genuine spiritual power, the blessing they gave to a child carried real vibration. The young person who bowed at the elder's feet entered the elder's aura and received golden cosmic. The blessing was not metaphor; it was an actual transfer of energy.

Today, Bapuji says, this is no longer reliable. Most people's auras are themselves filled with negativity. To take blessing from such a person is to absorb their negativity. Before giving a blessing, one should honestly ask: am I capable of giving a real blessing? Do I carry the vibration that can actually benefit another? If not, the blessing is, as Bapuji puts it, like writing cheques when there is no balance in the account. The cheques will bounce.

The Aura Around the Body

Bapuji teaches a practical detail. The aura of a negative person extends outward to about six inches around the body. When two people come into close contact — when they sit beside each other, embrace, or work shoulder to shoulder — their auras overlap. Energy passes from one to the other. The negativity of one becomes the negativity of the other.

This is one reason why association with knowledgeable, peaceful souls is so valuable, and association with chronically negative souls is so costly. Without realising it, the soul takes on the colour of those around it. The teaching here is not to become unfriendly; it is to be aware of where one spends one's time, and to seal the aura through soul-consciousness when contact with negativity is unavoidable.

Pehle yeh sochna ki main aashirvaad dene ke layak hoon ya nahi — phir aashirvaad dena.

First consider whether you are capable of giving a true blessing — only then give it.

Religious Places: A Sober Look

Bapuji is not against the temples, mosques, gurudwaras, or churches as such. He simply asks the reader to look honestly. The world today is full of religious places. Why, then, is the world still so unhappy? If the deities being worshipped at these places held the power they once did, surely the prayers of millions would have produced peace.

The fact that they have not should be enough to ask: where does real power actually lie?

Bapuji's answer is consistent. Real power lies with the Almighty Authority — the supreme creator of the entire infinite world, beyond any single deity of any single brahmand. To remember this Authority directly, in soul-consciousness, is to draw power from the actual source. To worship a deity who has himself fallen — and Bapuji teaches that even gods such as Indra have at times taken birth as worms — is to ask for power from a being who no longer has it to give.

This is not contempt for any religion. It is the urging of a teacher who wants the reader to direct his effort where it will actually bear fruit.

CHAPTER XVIII

Gita: The Two Swords of Knowledge and Practice

Bapuji has spoken many times about the Bhagavad Gita as the deepest text on karma. He treats Krishna not as one deity among many but as the incarnation of the Almighty Authority himself, speaking the supreme knowledge through the form of a man. The Gita is, in his view, the most direct teaching ever given to humanity on how to live, how to act, and how to liberate the soul.

The Battlefield as Symbol

On the battlefield of Kurukshetra, Arjuna faced his own relatives, his teachers, and his elders standing on the side of unrighteousness. He did not want to fight. His emotions overwhelmed him. Krishna, seeing this, did not console him with sentiment. He gave him knowledge.

Krishna's teaching to Arjuna was direct: forget the body and the bodily relations. Those standing in front of you are living corpses. They are not corpses because their physical bodies are dead; they are corpses because their souls have already aligned themselves with untruth. To stand on the side of asatya — untruth — is to be karmically equivalent to being dead while still alive. Animals are in a better state than such souls, because animals act without knowledge; these souls have refused knowledge that was offered to them.

Krishna's instruction to Arjuna, within the scriptural context of the Mahabharata battle, was therefore that Arjuna must fulfil his dharma as a kshatriya and act. Krishna warned Arjuna that if he did not act on the side of righteousness, the misery these souls would inflict on the world would itself accumulate in Arjuna's account, because he had the power to stop them and chose not to. This is a teaching given in the specific moral and historical setting of the Gita, not a prescription for present-day conduct.

Two Swords

Bapuji draws attention to Krishna's description of the two swords with which the mind can be controlled. The first sword is the sword of knowledge. The second is the sword of practice. Knowledge alone, without practice, remains theoretical. Practice without knowledge becomes blind ritual. Together, the two swords cut through the entanglement of the mind.

The sword of knowledge means understanding the theory of karma, the nature of the soul, the existence and identity of the Supreme. Without this, no spiritual effort can be correctly directed. The sword of practice means the daily, repeated turning of the mind back to the Supreme — the moment the mind begins to drift, immediately stopping it, immediately reconnecting it to its source. Practice is what makes knowledge live.

Bapuji says that this teaching applies to every reader. The mind will start thinking in directions it should not. At that moment, stop it. Do not let it run. Apply the knowledge again and again. Krishna himself instructed Arjuna to apply knowledge repeatedly in life. There is no shortcut around this. The mind responds only to consistent, conscious effort.

The Living Corpse

Bapuji often returns to Krishna's phrase — the living corpse. A living corpse is a person whose physical body still moves but whose soul has accepted untruth as its home.

Such a person assists in spreading falsehood, in protecting unrighteousness, in supporting harmful systems. To support untruth is to do asatya karma. The supporters of untruth are, in karmic terms, the same as those who commit the acts of untruth themselves.

The teaching is uncomfortable, but Bapuji presents it as Krishna gave it: those who help Duryodhan are no different from Duryodhan, even if their hands have not committed the same acts. This is why, in the Mahabharata, Bhishma Pitamah, Dronacharya, and Kripacharya were all destroyed alongside Duryodhan despite their personal greatness. Their support of unrighteousness placed them in the same karmic position as the unrighteousness itself.

The message of the Gita is: forget the body and bodily relations, and remember me, the Supreme.

The Promise

Krishna's promise in the Gita is the central promise of the entire path. Forget the body and bodily relations; remember me, the Supreme; I shall destroy all your sins; in the end, I shall take you to the highest of the highest supreme abode. Bapuji insists that this is not poetry. It is the actual mechanism of karma dissolution. To establish soul-consciousness, to connect with the Supreme, to remain in that connection while moving through the world — this is the path Krishna laid out, and it is the path Bapuji teaches today in the same essence, in the language of our age.

CHAPTER XIX

Life After Death and the Soul's Journey

Death is not an ending in Bapuji's teaching; it is a transition. The soul does not die when the body dies. The body, made of five gross elements, releases two of them — earth and water — back to the earth through cremation. The remaining three — ether, air, and fire — continue to carry the soul in its subtle form. Where the soul goes from there depends entirely on what it has been preparing for during its life on earth.

The Soul Becomes Lighter

Bapuji explains that after death, the soul's power can actually increase. Freed from the heaviness of earth and water elements, the soul in its subtle three-element body experiences a power roughly one hundred thousand times greater than it had in the physical body. This is significant. It means a soul that left the body filled with desire becomes, in the subtle state, even more strongly held by that desire. A soul that left in remembrance of the Supreme finds its remembrance similarly amplified.

This is why Bapuji repeats the ancient teaching: as the last thought, so the journey. What the soul thinks at the moment of death determines what it becomes immediately after death. A soul filled with anger may become a ghost-like entity. A soul filled with longing for a particular person may attach itself to that person. A soul filled with peace and remembrance moves toward higher realms.

The Layers Above

Above the earth realm, Bapuji teaches, there are many subtle dimensions. The first is bhuvarloka, the immediate subtle world. Above it is swargaloka, what scriptures call heaven — the realm of the deities. Above heaven are maharloka, janaloka, and tapaloka, each finer than the last. Above these is brahmapuri or satyaloka, the abode of Brahma. Above brahmapuri is vishnupuri, the realm of the angels who reside in supreme ether. And finally, beyond all of these, is the supreme abode — paramdham — where the soul exists in incorporeal form as pure divine light.

A soul that has performed good karma and has gained spiritual knowledge can, after death, progress through these layers. It may meditate in subtle worlds, receive guidance from sages and saints who reside there, and continue its evolution toward the supreme abode.

Subtle World Sages and Ashrams

Bapuji speaks of innumerable sages, saints, and ashrams in the subtle world. These are not metaphors. After leaving the body, a soul of higher quality may find itself among these guides. They teach the soul how to meditate in its subtle form, how to clear its remaining karmic accounts, how to ascend further. Many souls who in earthly life never had access to a true teacher receive their first real instruction only after death.

This is why even after the body is gone, spiritual progress remains possible — but only for souls who arrived in the subtle world with enough quality to recognise and accept such teaching. A soul that left filled with hatred, fear, or greed cannot easily benefit from the subtle teachers; the heavy vibration prevents it.

When Life Feels Unbearable

Bapuji speaks gently but clearly about the soul that brings its own life to an end. Ending the physical body does not end the soul's journey. The soul continues to exist. But a soul that departed prematurely, before its karmic duration was completed, often remains in subtle states without a body, unable to take a new birth until the original duration is finished. This period of suspended existence can be long and difficult.

This is not said to frighten anyone, but to make clear that ending one's life is never the escape it may appear to be in moments of darkness. The pain that drives such a choice does not vanish; it follows the soul into its new condition, where it must still be worked through. The path of knowledge, of meditation, of connection with the Supreme remains open even in great suffering, and is the way through.

♦ BAPUJI INSIGHT ♦

Antakaal mein jaisi mati, vaisi gati — jo aakhri sankalp hota hai, wahi raasta khulta hai.

As the final state of mind at the moment of death, so the soul's onward path — the last thought decides which road opens.

The Soul That Reaches Paramdham

A soul that has gained knowledge, has meditated steadily, and has dissolved its accumulated vikarma can, after leaving the body, ascend through the layers and reach paramdham. Here it becomes formless, existing as pure divine light. Yet even at this height, Bapuji notes a subtle truth. Some souls choose not to merge completely into the Supreme Consciousness, because complete merging dissolves individual identity. Such souls may again descend into the karmic worlds, choosing to continue their service rather than vanish into the source.

Reaching the supreme abode is therefore not always the end of the journey. For some souls, it is the basis from which a new chapter of service begins. The journey of the soul is more layered than any single description can convey, and what looks like a final destination from below, however from above, is a fresh beginning.

Journey Beyond Paramdham of Brahmand

Bapuji through his divine vision has explained many times that higher power soul / soul of infinite level (behad ke atma) continues its journey beyond this solar system's supreme abode. Only powerful souls can truly understand supreme spiritual knowledge. Bapuji guarantees that such souls always contemplate with questions like: Who am I? Where did I come from? Why did I come? Where must I return? Only a soul established in soul-consciousness can truly understand soul knowledge.

Higher level soul (higher kala) receives higher spiritual realisations such as Brahma Gyan, Maha Brahma Gyan, and Param Maha Brahma Gyan. These supreme levels of knowledge reveal the true structure of creation, including its beginning, middle, and eventual different types of dissolution, along with the hidden journey of the soul across different cosmic dimensions.

All souls have not descended from the same realm or kala; different souls originate from different levels of creation and therefore possess different spiritual capacities, karmic layers, and subtle vehicles. Because of this, each soul's spiritual aircraft exists according to its own cosmic level, and the soul's return journey depends upon the degree of spiritual awakening, purity, and realisation attained through supreme knowledge and Paramshanti.

Patel*

The following chapter is a unique knowledge which Bapuji shares based on his divine vision.

CHAPTER XX

The Subtle Aircraft and Portals

Most souls who descended into the subtle and physical worlds originally arrived through their own divine Viman — their subtle spiritual vehicle connected to their cosmic origin. Every creator in the higher realms wishes for the souls belonging to their creation to awaken, return, and once again sit within their Viman so they may be taken upward toward their original state. But without supreme spiritual knowledge, how can souls recognise their own Viman or find the path back?

Many people speak today about portals opening, yet these portals are not merely physical gates; they are subtle spiritual pathways connected with higher dimensions, divine frequencies, and sacred code vibrations. The portals are already open.

The Supreme Father of Behad sits within the supreme Viman, continuously calling out to His children: “Come, souls of Behad, come back.” In the same way, creators across different dimensions sit with the doors of their Viman open, calling their souls to return home.

However, the soul cannot ascend while remaining trapped in dense body-consciousness. The subtle body and the divine Viman are composed of Param Tattva and Param Light — extremely refined spiritual energy beyond ordinary physical matter. Therefore, the physical body and consciousness must gradually transform from a dense material state into an Avyakt light form.

Through spiritual awakening, soul consciousness, meditation, purity, and higher divine knowledge, the being becomes lighter, subtler, and more aligned with the vibrations of the higher realms. When the soul attains the nirakara (formless) state and remains connected with the Supreme Soul, knowing the Supreme Father, then it receives divine power from Paramatma. By taking that power, the soul destroys vikarma.

Only then can the soul consciously travel upward and enter its divine Viman. According to this teaching, this transformation from dense matter into divine light is the final stage of spiritual evolution and the supreme truth of the soul's return journey. Beyond this realisation, no higher supreme truth remains to be understood.

CHAPTER XXI

Yog Agni: Dissolving Karma

If karma is recorded in the causal body, then the only real liberation is to remove the recording. Bapuji teaches that this removal is possible through one specific process: yog agni — the fire of meditation. This is the central practical teaching of the entire path.

How Yog Agni Works

When a soul, established in soul-consciousness, remembers the Almighty Authority with full attention and love, the connection between the soul and the Supreme begins to flow. Through this connection, supreme divine light — Param Prakash — flows down into the soul. The light is not symbolic; it is real spiritual energy.

As the light enters the soul, it spreads into the causal body. There, it begins to act on the recordings. Just as a recording can be erased from a CD by being washed out by a higher energy, the recordings of vikarma in the causal body are washed out by the entry of Param Prakash. This is why Bapuji calls it yog agni — the fire of yoga. The fire does not burn the soul; it burns the karmic deposits encrusting it.

The Stages of Cleansing

As the cleansing progresses, the soul moves through the qualities of the three gunas. A soul in deep tamopradhan — dense impurity — begins to lighten into rajopradhan, a state of activity and effort. From there it lightens further into satopradhan, the original state of purity. And finally it transcends the gunas altogether, reaching the state of gunatit or nirgun — beyond all qualities of nature.

This progression is not theoretical. The soul actually feels lighter as the cleansing proceeds. The mind becomes quieter. The aura changes colour. Old emotional reactions begin to fade. Decisions become clearer. The everyday weight of being a body in the world begins to lift.

Why the Connection Must Be Accurate

Bapuji is precise about one point. The connection must be accurate. If the connection is one hundred percent, the power flows. If it is anything less — ninety-nine percent — the power does not flow. This is not because the Almighty withholds; it is because the very last fragment of ego or attachment in the soul prevents the full opening. The connection is like an electrical circuit: it is either complete or it is not.

This is why Bapuji emphasises the importance of soul-consciousness, true love, and complete trust. The soul must keep on thinking that it is a soul, then through that soul-conscious state must connect with and remember the Almighty. It must get totally lost in the love of the Almighty, becoming completely thoughtless. At this stage — what Bapuji has called the loveleen stage — the connection is real and the power flows.

Why Other Methods Fall Short

Many practices are presented in the world as spiritual paths. Recitation of holy books, ritual worship, formal meditation directed at fallen deities, prayer for material favours — all of these have their followers. Bapuji does not condemn the practitioners, but he is honest about the result. None of these methods bring Param Prakash into the soul, because none of them establish the direct connection with the Almighty Authority.

Lord Krishna himself, in the Gita, said: I am not attainable through jap, tap, dhyān, and yog. I am attainable through gyan. Bapuji takes this verse seriously. Without knowledge of who the Supreme actually is — without understanding that the Almighty Authority is the supreme creator of the infinite, beyond any single solar system or galaxy or universe — no method can lead to the actual source. The practices may produce calm, may bring some good vibrations, may even develop certain abilities, but they cannot dissolve the karmic load at its root.

Param prakash ke aane se aatma ke saare vikarm jal jaate hain — yahi yog agni hai.

When supreme divine light enters the soul, all its negative karmas are burned away — this is the fire of yog.

The Practitioner's Daily Life

Bapuji gives practical guidance for the practitioner. In daily life, remember the Almighty while eating, while working, while sleeping. Let one connection run continuously beneath all activity. Whatever action arises, perform it as nishkam karma in remembrance of the Supreme. This continuous remembrance gradually recharges the causal body, slowly burning vikarma even between formal meditation sessions.

And when the body is finally released at the end of life, the soul that has lived this way departs in soul-consciousness, ascends through the higher realms, and eventually reaches the supreme abode. The work done daily — quietly, persistently, without spectacle — is what determines that ascent.

CHAPTER XXII

Karmatit Awastha and Liberation

The summit of the entire teaching is karmatit awastha — the state in which the soul has gone beyond the influence of karma altogether. Bapuji presents this not as a distant philosophical concept but as the actual destination of every soul that walks the path with sincerity. It is the state in which the karmic record has been fully dissolved.

What Karmatit Means

In the karmatit state, no karmic accounts remain in the soul. The recordings of countless past births have been burned away by Param Prakash. The causal body, once full of records, has become clean. Because there is no record, there is no karmic pull. The soul is no longer subject to the law that drove its birth and death across innumerable lifetimes.

Bapuji describes the experience. The soul feels peaceful. The body feels weightless. The mind is free of any thought, in a blissful state. The akash element — ether — increases within the soul, creating space for upward movement. Thoughtlessness arrives not as emptiness but as freedom.

Death at Will (Samadhi)

A soul that has reached karmatit gains a remarkable benediction: the ability to leave the body at will. Bapuji explains this directly. When all karmic bondage is dissolved, the soul is no longer held in the body by force of accumulated record. It can choose its moment of departure. It also has knowledge of its journey to amarlok — the immortal world — and can travel there consciously.

This is what the ancient sages described as conscious death. It is not a magical power; it is the natural consequence of having no remaining karmic weight. A soul still bound by karma cannot leave when it wishes; the karma will finish its work first. A soul free of karma is no longer subject to that delay.

Sanskars Also Dissolve

In the karmatit state, sanskars themselves dissolve. Bapuji explains the layered relationship: mind operates within intellect, intellect within sanskar. When the soul becomes thoughtless and reaches karmatit, the underlying sanskars no longer have material to feed on. The negative tendencies that drove behaviour for many births simply fade away. The soul returns to its original quality, untouched by the long descent through the yugas.

This is why karmatit is not a subtle adjustment to the personality but a fundamental transformation. A new being emerges from the old one — a being that resembles the original soul as it existed before its descent into karmic bondage.

The Difference Between Mukti and Jeevan Mukti

Bapuji distinguishes two related but different goals. Mukti is liberation in which the soul no longer exists in creation — it dissolves into its creator, like a drop merging into the ocean. Jeevan mukti, on the other hand, is liberation in which the soul has freed itself from all karmic accounts and lives eternally with its creator in the blissful state, while still retaining its individual existence.

Both states arise from the karmatit foundation. Without dissolving karma, neither is possible. With karma dissolved, the soul stands at the threshold and can move into either state according to its nature and its connection.

The Path to Karmatit

Bapuji summarises the path with great simplicity. First, gain knowledge — the theory of karma, the nature of the soul, the identity of the Supreme. Without knowledge, no other practice will reach the source. Second, meditate in soul-consciousness, connecting directly with the Almighty Authority. Third, allow Param Prakash to flow into the soul. Fourth, perform daily action as nishkam karma, in continuous remembrance. Fifth, persist.

Across one or more births, depending on the depth of accumulated vikarma, the soul moves through the stages. The aura clears. The sanskars change. The karmic load lightens. And at last the soul stands free of the law that bound it for ages, able to depart its body at will, ready for the highest journey.

◆ BAPUJI INSIGHT ◆

saare karmon ka rikord khatm ho gaya — bas param prakash bachta hai.

Only that soul attains the karmatit state in which the entire record of karmas has finished — only the supreme light remains.

World Transformation Via Self Transformation

The final teaching of this book is also its simplest. Bapuji has stated it many times in many ways: first transform yourself. The transformation of the world is not a separate work; it is the natural extension of the transformation of the individual. There is no other path.

The Order of Change

Bapuji explains the order plainly. When a soul purifies its own thoughts, its aura becomes positive. When the aura becomes positive, the home becomes peaceful. When the home becomes peaceful, the surroundings begin to change. As more individuals undergo this transformation, families change; as families change, communities change; as communities change, regions change; and gradually the collective vibration of the planet shifts.

This is not slow change pretending to be revolution. This is the only kind of change that lasts. External revolutions, by contrast, simply replace one set of unenlightened souls with another. The same negativity continues under new banners. Real transformation, the kind that does not relapse, can only come from within.

The 108 Seed Souls

Bapuji has spoken of one hundred and eight seed souls who will act as instruments of the Almighty Authority in the work of world transformation. These are not ordinary souls. They are highly elevated beings who have come, or will come, into this work as the principal channels of divine power. Through their meditation, supreme energy is being brought down from the highest of the highest abode and released into the atmosphere of the planet.

Bapuji is clear that ordinary human souls cannot perform this work alone. The transformation of the entire infinite universe of souls is far beyond what any small group of human beings could accomplish. Only the Almighty Authority has that capacity. The seed souls are the vehicles through which that capacity expresses itself on earth.

The Role of Every Reader

Yet every reader of this book has a real role. The role is not to perform feats; it is to contribute to the changing vibration. Each soul that genuinely turns inward, gains knowledge, meditates in connection with the Supreme, and lives as a karma yogi adds weight to the collective shift. The path of the seed souls is fed and supported by the path of every awakened individual.

Bapuji asks the reader to consider his or her vision. Make a wider perspective. Think beyond religion, caste, and creed. Consider the principle of vasudhaiva kutumbakam — the whole world is one family. The creator of every human is one. The colour, language, custom, and belief differ on the surface; the soul beneath is the same. To see this clearly is itself a form of self-transformation.

Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam

Bapuji explains that when a soul truly sees every other being as a part of the supreme — as a fragment of the same creator — the impulse to harm vanishes. There is no one left to harm. There is only oneself appearing in different forms.

The compassion that arises from this vision is not effortful kindness; it is the natural recognition of family.

In this vision, no one is given sorrow. No one is troubled. Forgiveness becomes spontaneous because there is no one separate enough to hold a grievance against. The five vices — lust, anger, greed, attachment, ego — lose their grip, because they all depended on seeing oneself as separate from the world.

◆ BAPUJI INSIGHT ◆

Pehle khud ko badlo — phir parivar badlega, samaj badlega, aur antam mein vishwa badlega.

First change yourself — then the family changes, society changes, and ultimately the world changes.

A Closing Word

This book has travelled from the simplest definition of karma to the highest state of liberation. It has walked through types and layers, through thoughts and actions, through aura and causal body, through forgiveness and the limits of pratikraman, through the law of attraction and the path of the karma yogi, through the journey of the soul and the fire of yog. The thread running through all of it is one: the soul is responsible for what it experiences, and the soul has the power to change what it experiences — if it knows how, and if it connects with the source of that power.

Bapuji has given that knowledge. The reader is invited to receive it, to reflect on it, and to begin. The work is gradual but the direction is certain. With each step, the load lightens, the aura brightens, and the soul moves nearer to its original home. Paramshanti — supreme peace — is not a reward for the few. It is the original state of every soul, and it waits for every soul that takes the path back to it.

Glossary

Key Sanskrit & Spiritual Terms

Atma — The soul — a point of conscious energy. We are not the body but the soul. Its original state is that of pure divine light, formless and in energy form.

Paramatma — The Supreme Soul; the creator of souls. When a soul is in its true formless light state with the power to create other souls through affirmation, it is called Paramatma.

Kala — A unit of measurement of the power held in a soul or supreme creator. Just as electrical capacity is measured in watts, spiritual power is measured in kala.

Sankalp — A determination, thought, or affirmation generated by the soul. Mind power is the soul's power expressed as sankalp shakti.

Nirakari — The formless, incorporeal state of a soul — its true divine state as pure divine light. The ultimate stage of a soul.

Akari — The subtle form of a soul, not visible to the physical eye, made of supreme elements. Created when soul affirmations cause the soul to step down from pure light into a subtle form.

Sakari — The physical form taken when soul energy further degenerates into the gross body.

Tattva — Element. The visible world is composed of five elements: earth, water, fire, air, and ether.

Param Tattva — Supreme element. Just as a nucleus is finer than an atom, paramtattva is finer than tattva and carries far higher energy.

Paramdham — The supreme abode — the highest dimension of creation in any solar system, where Shiv resides in incorporeal divine light form. The soul's ultimate spiritual destination.

Shiv / Maha Shiv / Param Maha Shiv — The incorporeal creators of, respectively, a solar system, a galaxy, and a universe. Each resides in the supreme abode of its respective creation.

Shakti / Maha Shakti / Param Maha Shakti — The female counterpart energies created by the corresponding incorporeal Shiv at each level of creation, partnering in the work of creation.

Peedi — A generation of creators or supreme souls. Higher peedi corresponds to higher power and higher dimension of creation.

Param Prakash — Supreme divine light — the energy or power of a soul in its incorporeal form, the state of pure soul consciousness.

Param Maha Tattva — The supreme great element radiated around Param Prakash; the highest energy level after Param Prakash itself.

Had ki atma — Common souls of low power, created at lower levels of a solar system, made up to the level of supreme ether or ether elements.

Behad ki atma — Powerful souls constituted only of Param Prakash and Param Maha Tattva. Behad souls.

Behad ki duniya — The vast, limitless, immeasurable creation of infinite kala — the world beyond all measure.

Behad ka PM — The most powerful supreme soul who is the controller of the limitless infinite creation.

Mukti — Liberation. In this knowledge, the stage when the soul no longer exists as an individual in creation but dissolves into its creator.

Jeevan Mukti — Liberation in which the soul is freed from all karmic accounts, possesses complete knowledge of its creator, and exists eternally with its creator in a blissful state.

Vyakt — The visible world of five-element creation.

Avyakt — The invisible subtle and supreme subtle world of creation.

Bhavatit — Beyond all feelings and emotions.

Karmatit — The state in which the soul has been freed from all karmic bondages and is beyond the law of any karmic accounts in any plane of creation.

Gunatit / Nirgun — Beyond the three qualities of nature — satva, rajas, and tamas — representing the pure soul-conscious or incorporeal state of the soul.

Param Purush — The supreme male energy; the first creation of the incorporeal supreme creator in any dimension, always existing with its companion Shakti.

Vikarm — Sin or bad action committed by the soul; karma that creates negative energy in the soul.

Brahmand — Solar system.

Maha Brahmand — Galaxy.

Param Maha Brahmand — Universe.

Subtle world — The world of subtle elements existing beyond the gross five-element world.

Causal world — A world finer than the subtle world, made of supreme subtle elements.

Roop — A clone of a soul created from its own energy through affirmation; reduces the original power of the supreme soul.

Incarnation — A cell of a supreme soul or higher-dimensional soul used to carry out specific work on earth, carrying less energy than a roop.

Pralay — The process of dissolution of a creation.

Behad ki Kala ka Paramdham — The supreme abode of the highest dimension of creation, of inestimable infinite power; the abode of the Almighty Authority.

Behad ka Baap — The Supreme Father or Almighty Authority — the unique master creator of the entire limitless creation; the ultimate source of all power.

Jeev — When souls fall to lower levels of creation with physical bodies due to uncontrolled desires, they are called jeev. Ignorance makes a divine soul live like an animal.

Shastra — A Hindu scripture in which spiritual matters are discussed.

Puranas — Ancient Hindu literature on divine wisdom in story form, describing the creation of the solar system.

Ishta Dev — The favourite chosen deity that an individual worships throughout life on the path of devotion.

Guru — A spiritual instructor who guides the soul from darkness to enlightenment.

Ishwar — The master or owner of creation; incorporeal Shiv.

Gyan Marg — The path of knowledge, in which the soul continuously acquires knowledge of its creator and contemplates the supreme knowledge until it realises its destiny.

Bhakti Marg — The path of devotion, in which the soul surrenders to its Ishta Dev and chants its glory until reaching its goal through worship and rituals.

Behad Gyan — The supreme knowledge of the Almighty Authority and the entire boundless creation — the ultimate knowledge from beginning to end of the vast cosmos.

Paramshanti — Supreme peace — the original state of a soul when first created. The state when the soul establishes itself in its pure divine incorporeal state of supreme light.

Seva — Selfless service; in Behad Gyan, the highest form of seva is to disseminate supreme knowledge for the benefit of souls and to spread vibrations of Paramshanti.

Sanskar — The character or impression of the soul recorded in its causal body. The mind functions according to its sanskar; transformation begins by changing one's sanskars.

Yog — Connection. When the soul, after acquiring Behad Gyan, immerses itself in deep love for its creator and forgets the physical world, it has entered yog.

Dharana — The final stage of Behad Gyan, when the soul realises its true state of pure soul consciousness in incorporeal form and itself becomes the embodiment of knowledge.

Sanatan Dharm — The eternal religion existing since the beginning of creation of this Brahmand. Hindu religion is also known as Adi Sanatan Dharm — the religion that has always existed and will always continue.

Karan Sharir — The causal body — the deepest of the soul's bodies, made of the ether element. The storehouse of all karmic accounts; cleansing the karan sharir is essential to controlling the mind.

Loka — A layer or dimension of creation within a Brahmand, galaxy, or universe — such as Bhuloka (earth), Bhuhvarloka, Swargloka, Maharloka, Janaloka, and so on.

Yugas — The recurring time-cycles on earth: Sat-Yug, Treta-Yug, Dwapar-Yug, and Kali-Yug. Together they form a Chaturyug, repeating until the great dissolution.

Purusharth — Spiritual effort made by a human being to understand the soul science through self-enquiry and meditation.

Sanchit Karma — The accumulated store of all karmas performed across countless past lives — the karmic bank from which present and future experiences arise.

Prarabdha Karma — The portion of sanchit karma selected for experience in the current lifetime; what is commonly called destiny or fate.

Kriyamān Karma — The karma being created right now through present action and free will, often producing immediate or near-immediate results.

Āgāmi Karma — The karma being created in the present moment that will shape future experiences in this life or in lives to come.

Satya Karma — Good or righteous action that earns punya (spiritual merit) and brings positive results, though it still binds the soul to the cycle of birth and death.

Paap Karma — Bad or sinful action; also called vikarma. Creates negative energy in the soul and leads to suffering in this or future lives.

Nishkam Karma — Desireless action — also called akarma — performed without desire for personal results, in remembrance of the Supreme. Such action does not bind the soul.

Karma Bandhan — Karmic bondage; the binding of the soul to particular souls or experiences as a consequence of past actions.

Yog Agni — The fire of meditation; the process by which Param Prakash, drawn from the Almighty Authority through soul-conscious connection, burns the recordings of vikarma in the causal body.

Pratikraman — The Jain practice of repeatedly seeking forgiveness for one's mistakes; brings temporary relief but cannot, by itself, dissolve deep karmic recordings of past births.

Punya — Spiritual merit earned through righteous action; the positive counterpart of paap (sin).

Asuri Lakshmi / Devi Lakshmi — Wealth of negative origin and wealth of dharmic origin. Wealth earned through sinful means is asuri lakshmi; wealth earned through righteous means is devi lakshmi.

Bhagya — Destiny or fate; the ripening of sanchit karma into the present life.

Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam — The principle that the whole world is one family — all beings are children of one supreme creator.

Almighty Authority — Bapuji's English term for Behad ka Baap — the supreme master creator and controller of the entire infinite creation.
