About Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

Bapuji — full name Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly called Dadaji by the younger generation — was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. His childhood, however, was spent in another village named Ambasan, also in the Mehsana district.

In the early part of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realising the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers to realise their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times, he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy, he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, he established a spiritual institution called Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world, filled with suffering and disorder, into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt. Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as Maa, worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to eighteen hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realised through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of super consciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji's teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the types of celestial creators across different dimensions, the creation of our solar system, galaxy and universe, and most importantly, the transcendental knowledge of the multiverse and realities beyond it. His knowledge is supremely profound and is intended for highly evolved seekers, referred to as behad (boundless / limitless) souls. According to Bapuji, these behad souls will play a key role in transforming this mortal world into an eternal divine realm.

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

Preface

Gyan Daan Maha Daan

(Sharing Knowledge is the highest charity — share to the maximum extent with all.)

— Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

There is a world that runs alongside this one. It cannot be touched, it cannot be photographed, and yet it presses upon every life on this earth. Bapuji calls it the sukshma jagat (subtle world) — the subtle world. From within it, souls of every kind, shape the actions, thoughts and fortunes of human beings, often without their knowing.

This book gathers what Bapuji has revealed about that world. It is not a study of folklore. It is not a survey of opinions. It is a record of what one who has witnessed the subtle world directly, through divine vision, has chosen to tell us about its laws — about its beings, their families and their hierarchies, about the way they enter the human body, about the means by which a soul may at last be set free from their grip.

The teaching is precise. The categories are exact. The numbers, the durations and the names are given as Bapuji has given them. No external interpretation has been added. Where Bapuji uses a Sanskrit or Hindi term, the term has been kept there and written here in this book in italicised, with simple meanings drawn from his own usage and from the standard glossary of Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay.

The reader who is new to this knowledge need not be alarmed. The world Bapuji describes is not meant to frighten. It is meant to be understood clearly, so that no longer, any one should wander blindly in those so called super natural incidents. Once the facts of subtle world understood properly, it can be transcended — and Bapuji shows the way.

That way, in his own words, is the path of atma swaroop (the soul-consciousness) — to become established in the soul, to draw down the param light (supreme divine light) into one's aura, and to let the vibrations of Param Shanti spread outward. Where these pure divine vibrations spread in the atmosphere, the bhoot, pret (vengeful spirit) and pishach (vampiric being) quieten. Where they prevail, the soul itself is liberated.

This book is offered to every sincere seeker, in the spirit of the mission of Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay — that each soul shall return at last to its original abode, the Paramdham (supreme abode).

Chapter One

The Subtle World Governs the Gross World

Behind the visible gross world there stands an invisible subtle one. Bapuji calls it the sukshma jagat — the subtle world. Most human beings live their entire lives without ever turning their attention to it; yet not a single hour of human life is free from its influence. The teaching opens with a single, decisive statement.

◆ “Those of the subtle world run the gross world.”

— Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

This is not a metaphor. It is the natural law as Bapuji presents it. The mortal world — the mrityu lok (mortal world) — does not move on its own initiative. It is set in motion, again and again, by those who dwell in the realms beyond it. The devas in svarga lok (heaven), the gandharvas, kinnaras and yakshas in bhuvarlok (the realm above earth), and lower down the bhoots, pretas and pishachs in the regions close to this earth — these are the beings whose intentions, whose vibrations, whose presence shape what unfolds here on earth.

How a soul comes to dwell on this earth

The pattern Bapuji describes is simple. Souls fall from svarga lok and take human birth on this earth. As long as a human being remains sattwa pradhan (predominantly pure) — established in goodness — the soul is sustained in its dignity. When the human being becomes tamo pradhan (predominantly heavy and ignorant) — sunk in heaviness, ignorance and craving — the soul falls further, into the seven patal loks (subterranean realms) below this earth. There it becomes asur (demon-soul). From there, when its longing for indulgence in the gross world remains, it returns as a bhoot, a pret or a pishach.

These categories are not poetic exaggerations. They are precise classes of subtle being, each with its own range of power, its own dwelling, and its own way of acting upon human life.

Why this world is in such heaviness

Bapuji reminds us that this was not always so. In the satyug (age of truth), the world was sattva pradhan — its very atmosphere was light and pure, the population was small, and the bhoot-pret realm had no scope to act. There was no place for it. As the ages turned — through treta (the second age), through dvapar (the third age), into kalyug (age of darkness) — the atmosphere itself grew heavy, and these beings multiplied without measure.

Today, in his words, the atmosphere of the world is tamo pradhan, and the eight hundred crore human beings on this planet are influenced by the bhoots and prets of the subtle world. This is the foundational fact from which the rest of the teaching unfolds.

The natural law

It is a law of nature, Bapuji says, that whichever side of the scale is heavier, that side will run the world. At present, the heavier side belongs to the Tamo Pradhan bhoot-pret realm. They will continue to run the world until the sattva pradhan souls awaken — until sattva Pradhan souls establish themselves in atma swaroop and let the vibrations of Param Shanti spread outward through the atmosphere.

Until the atmosphere of the earth is changed, the heaviness of the kalyug will keep its grip. Once the atmosphere is changed, the bhoot-pret realm freezes — its activity ceases. This is what happens at the close of every kalyug. Tamo Pradhan souls make the atmosphere of world completely Tamo Pradhan finally it leads to destruction of creation which is cleansing process that ushers the satya yuga. The same shift, Bapuji says, can be brought about now, by those souls who awaken to their own swaroop and serve as channels for the param light.

Why this knowledge is given

It is for this reason that the laws of the subtle world are revealed here. The sincere seeker must understand the realm in which their own life unfolds. Without that understanding, every effort towards spiritual progress can be undone in an instant by these negative forces, which the seeker does not even see.

With this understanding, the seeker becomes alert. The seeker takes shelter in the only protection that holds — the bond with the Behad ke Parampita (Supreme Father of the boundless), the steadiness of one's own atma swaroop, and the constant outflow of Param Shanti vibrations. From there, all the rest follows.

Chapter Two

The Categories of Subtle Beings

Bapuji's teaching about the subtle world is precise about its inhabitants. The general words used in ordinary speech — ghost, spirit, demon — collapse a great many distinct categories into a single blur. The actual law makes sharp distinctions. Each class of being has its own degree of power, its own dwelling, its own way of acting on a human life. The seeker must learn these categories clearly.

Bhoot — the simplest class

A bhoot, Bapuji says, is the simplest of all. It carries little vasana (craving) — little craving. It is, in his words, of low desire. Bhoots dwell quietly in homes and in jungles. Some find their way into temples and there they sit and perform a kind of sadhana of their own. They do not, ordinarily, harass anyone heavily. If a bhoot enters a person, it stays only on the outer covering of the sukshma sharir (subtle body) — on the surface — and it can usually be removed by taking that person to a powerful temple, where the atmosphere of that place will drive it out.

Pret — the dangerous class

A pret is far more dangerous. The pret carries higher degree (jabardast) of vasana — overpowering craving. Where the bhoot is content to remain on the outer layer, the pret enters the second layer of the sukshma sharir. From there it works far more strongly upon the person it has entered. A pret will not be removed by ordinary temple visits. They hold is too deep.

Bapuji also describes how a bhoot itself can become a pret. When the cravings of a bhoot grow steadily over time and intensify, that bhoot is converted, in his expression, into a pret. The category is not fixed for all time — it is determined by the depth and force of the vasana within the being.

Pishach — the blood-drinking class

Above the pret stands the pishach. The pishach is the blood-drinking entity, in Bapuji's teaching. When a pishach enters a person, it does not stop at the outer or middle layers of subtle body. It penetrates the third and fourth coverings of the sukshma sharir, and finally the fifth — the innermost — until it has merged with the entire subtle body of that person. From there it controls the mind itself. The original mind of the soul is suppressed; the mind of the pishach takes its place. From inside the body, the pishach drinks the subtle energies of the body. This is what is meant when Bapuji says a pishach drinks blood — it is the subtle force of the body that is being consumed, not the gross fluid.

Chudail — the woman of intense vasana

Bapuji distinguishes a particular class of subtle female being. A woman who dies with a strong unfulfilled desire — like a mother who passes away at childbirth and remains bound to her child by an overwhelming protective vasana, or a woman who takes her own life in the agony of love — such souls do not pass on quietly. She becomes, in his expression, a chudail (dangerous female ghost) — a dangerous female bhoot. The chudail's capacity to harm is great. She may attach herself to others who come into the same circumstances she could not herself fulfil, and there cause severe disturbance.

The same category, known by different names

Bapuji notes that different regions and traditions of the world have given different names to subtle beings of the same class as the pret. The names vary; the underlying nature does not change. Such a being, like the pret, has a family, has children, and dwells largely in the jungles.

Shaitan and brahm-rakshas

Above all of these, Bapuji places the shaitan (devil). Even the pishach, in his framing, sits below the shaitan in the order of dangerousness. The shaitan is, in his exact words, a brahm-rakshas (knowledgeable demon) — a being who has the knowledge of brahm but acts as a rakshas (demon). It is a being of high spiritual knowledge whose actions are wholly evil. Such a being demands sacrifice. It causes the one it has entered to drink many bottles of liquor at once, to consume many cigarettes at once, to eat five kilograms of meat at a sitting. Once a shaitan-class pishach has entered a body, it is exceedingly difficult to remove. It will not leave until it has consumed the soul itself, and at the end it will kill that soul.

Why these distinctions matter

These distinctions are not academic. They are practical. The seeker who is troubled needs to know whether the disturbance comes from a bhoot — which can be lifted with relative ease — or from a pret, which cannot, or from a pishach, which has merged with the subtle body itself, or from a shaitan, which will demand a complete change in the orientation of the soul before it lets go.

In every case, Bapuji is clear. There is one true remedy, and one only. It is not the tantrik (occult practitioner). It is not the visit to a particular temple. The only solution is to connect with Almighty authority in a state of pure soul consciousness which leads to steady outflow of Param Shanti vibrations, which will seal the aura with the param light. Subtle being is categorised according to negativity ingrained in the soul — from the simplest bhoot to the most harmful brahm-rakshas. Only Param Light can set a soul free from such cravings and negativity.

Chapter Three

How a Soul Falls and Becomes a Bhoot

To understand the bhoot-pret realm, one must understand how a soul becomes such category entity. No soul is born a bhoot. A bhoot is what a soul becomes when the gravity of its own cravings has pulled it down results in stagnation of soul in a particular area. As such souls does not have any knowledge, thus they are under tremendous illusion and attached to their bodily relations on earth. Bapuji describes this descent with great clarity.

The downward path

A soul that begins in svarga lok and falls from there takes human birth on this earth. As a human being, that soul lives, acts and dies on earth. The crucial question is, what is the state of the mind at the moment of death. There is an ancient law: ant mati so gati (as the final thought, so the destination) — as the final orientation of the mind, so the destination.

If, at the time of death, the mind is filled with vasana — with cravings unfulfilled, with longings still alive, with attachments still gripping the heart — that vasana does not vanish at the moment the body falls away. The cravings (vasana) are nothing but imprint on soul and those cravings move with soul. To fulfil those cravings (vasana) , the soul becomes a bhoot. If the vasana is heavier and more violent, the soul becomes a pret. If it is heavier still, a pishach. If the human being lived an asuric life — a life of sin, violence and uncontrolled craving — the soul falls further, into the seven patal loks, and there becomes an asur.

Why ignorance is the cause

Bapuji has spoken with clarity about why this downfall of soul occurs. It happens because the soul does not have the knowledge about the true self and various dimensions of creation. If the soul, in its human birth, had knowledge how to attain Indralok (realm of Indra), it would have performed the hundred yajnas (fire rituals) of that path, and would have become Indra (king of the devatas) — as did Raja Bali, who performed his hundred yajnas and saw Vishnu's avatar appear before him. If the soul had wished for Vishnupuri (abode of Vishnu), it would have done the tapasya (spiritual austerity) of Vishnu. If for Shivratri (abode of Shiv), the tapasya of Shiv.

But when the soul did none of these things. The vasanas of the five elements — the kaam (lust), the krodh (anger), the lobh (greed), the moh (attachment), the ahankar (ego) — held it tightly. The same five vikaars that ruled on its soul as a human being now rule on it as a bhoot. This, Bapuji says, is the very reason it has become a bhoot.

Religion and rituals cannot liberate the soul

It is essential to understand that this descent is not the inheritance of any one tradition. The law applies universally, to every soul, regardless of the path it has walked. Any soul that leaves the body while still carrying vasana — longing, attachment, unfulfilled craving — remains bound by that vasana, and the vasana itself sustains the soul in the subtle realm wherever it finds itself. None of these souls rest peacefully. With vasana in them, they enter homes, cause disturbance, and seek the satisfaction of their cravings just as a human being does. The teaching points only to this law of the soul; it implies nothing about the truth or worth of any tradition's outer practices.

The five elements within the bhoot

What was in the human being is now in the bhoot. The kaam, the krodh, the lobh, the moh, the ahankar — these were the contents of the human mind, and they remain the contents of the subtle being that emerges after death. The soul has not been transformed. The body has fallen away; the inner imprints on soul has not. This is the crux of the matter, and this is why human ignorance and becoming a ghost/bhoot are so closely bound together. To break the cycle, the inner imprints (samskar) itself must be cleansed. No external rite, no temple visit, no offering can substitute for that inner change.

Why these souls cannot rise

Once the soul has become a bhoot, it cannot rise. Bapuji has given proper clarification on this subject matter. A bhoot cannot ascend more than one to two kilometres above the surface of the earth. Wherever it was born into this state — in a particular jungle, in a particular village — there it remains for a long time. It cannot enter svarga lok. It cannot enter even the gandharva lok. It cannot reach any of the higher worlds. It dwells where it was made, in the range of three to four kilometres at most, and there it acts.

This is the law: the descent into the bhoot state is easy and almost automatic for the ignorant soul; the rise out of it is exceedingly hard. It is hard because the means of rising are unknown to the bhoot. The vasana that pulled it down continues to bind it. Liberation requires gyan — and gyan is precisely what the bhoot does not have.

The mercy of the teaching

It is for this reason that Bapuji's teaching about the laws of the subtle world is itself an act of mercy. The seeker who hears these laws in human birth has the chance to change the orientation of the mind before death — to become atmagyani, to know the supreme father, to draw down the param light, and to leave the body without vasana. That seeker does not become a bhoot. That seeker becomes free.

The teaching is therefore offered not to frighten anyone, but to save them. To know the descent is to be empowered against it. To know the cause is to remove the cause. This is the spirit in which the categories that follow have been set out.

Chapter Four

The Family and Lifespan of Bhoots

To one unfamiliar with this knowledge, it may seem strange to speak of the family life of bhoots. Yet Bapuji is unambiguous. Bhoots have families. They have ages. They have spouses. They have children. The subtle world has its own social order, and that order is not entirely unlike the one we know on the surface.

Husband, wife and child

The bhoot, Bapuji says, has its female counter part called bhootni. The pair has its own offspring. There is, in this sense, a household. Where do these households dwell? Most often in the jungles, where great numbers of bhoots and their families gather and live among themselves. Some dwell in particular homes that have become attached to them across generations.

How do bhoots produce their offspring? Not by the means of physical intimation as found in the gross world. They procreate through sankalpa (intention or affirmation) — through the affirming/intention of the subtle being offsprings are created in subtle realm. When a bhoot and a bhootni come together with a single intention to bring forth a child of their own kind, then the vibration of affirmation takes the form of a new being. Bapuji draws the parallel with the law of creation he has set out elsewhere: as in the niraakaari (formless / incorporeal) Paramdham, where one soul gave rise to many through power of sankalpa, and from these others arose, so the same natural law of expansion of creation continues even in the lower dimensions of creation. The same process is at work — the same law operates — only the level differs.

Lifespan and age

Bhoots also have a life span and age. They are born, they grow, and the entity matures. Yet the manner of growth is unlike that of human beings. A bhoot does not go through the slow process of childhood, adolescence and adulthood as the body of a human child does. Bapuji says that in the subtle world, time is different. A child born in the bhoot family can become a grown up within a short time at once by the transfer of power from the elder bhoots. There is no need for ten years of slow growth. The understanding can be passed in a single transmission. Whereas on earth education takes years and years, on the contrary, in the sukshma jagat this process of learning can be accomplished instantly through visualisation directly. In this way the new born bhoot/ghost can learn fast and become a grown up bhoot in a short time.

How long a bhoot remains

How long does the bhoot has to remain with this subtle body, i.e. what is the average life span of a bhoot in subtle realm? The duration is not small. Bapuji speaks of bhoots remaining in this yoni for thousands and even tens of thousands of years. There are souls, he says, those have been in the bhoot-pret yoni for ten thousand years and more. These stories have been widely told in the ancient scriptures. They have not taken birth again. They have not risen. The vasana within them has been so strong, so saturated, that the soul has remained stagnant where it fell.

In this sense, the lifespan of a bhoot is the lifespan of its vasana. As long as the cravings persist, the body of bhoot persists. When at last the vasana is exhausted, or when the great dissolutions take place, the form of bhoot is dissolved. But within the long ages of an Earth cycle, a bhoot can endure across spans that would seem unimaginable to one who reckons time only in terms of human years.

Sickness, fear and the diseases of the subtle

Even in this state, the being is not free from suffering. Bhoots fall ill. When the atmosphere of the gross world is afflicted by an epidemic — Bapuji gives the example of the plague, and the recent example of corona — that affliction also reaches the subtle beings nearby. The body of the bhoot is composed of three tattvas: akash, vayu and agni. The vayu element is the carrier of contagion in the gross world, and it carries contagion in the subtle world too. When a household has been touched by sickness, the bhoots dwelling in that household are touched also.

For their sicknesses, the bhoots have their own remedies. They go to certain temples and there gather in groups; the well-disposed bhoots transfer power to the suffering ones, charging their sukshma sharirs and curing them — much as the devatas (deities) of svarga lok once did for one another. The same need for healing exists at every level of creation; only the means differ.

Fear among bhoots

The bhoots also have fears for many uncertainties and negative activities going on in subtle world. A bhoot fears other bhoots — for there are groups, and there is also politics of amongst groups in subtle world. A bhoot also fears human beings — for it knows that a human being who has gained soul power through supreme gyan, can liberate Bhoot from its subtle body; and liberation is the one thing the bhoot does not want, Bhoot exist in the state of deep ignorance. Bapuji puts the matter plainly. The bhoot is comfortable in the home it has occupied. It has its food, its company, its place. It does not wish to be uprooted by an exorcist or a tantrik who would only displace it into another home — a home it does not yet acquainted with — where it must struggle anew.

How to recognise a bhoot's presence

And yet, when a bhoot enters a person, the change can be detected. The conduct itself shifts. The person's expressions, demands and longings are no longer their own. The being demands liquor, demands particular foods, demands meat, demands attention. These are not the demands of the original soul. They are the cravings of the bhoot, expressed through a body that is no longer fully under its own command.

The whole household life of the bhoot — its families, its ages, its sicknesses and its fears — exists alongside ours, often within our own walls. The teaching invites us not to dismiss this fact, and not to be unsettled by it, but simply to know it. Once it is known, it can be addressed, and the means of addressing it has already been declared.

Chapter Five

How Bhoots Enter the Human Body

The most consequential teaching of the subtle world is the one that touches us most directly. It is the teaching about how bhoots, pretis and pishachs enter the human body. To understand it, the seeker must first understand that the human body is not a single envelope. It has more than one body, and not all of them are visible.

The seven layers of the sukshma sharir

Around the gross body of every human being, Bapuji says, there is the sukshma sharir — the subtle body — and around that there is what is commonly called the aura. The sukshma sharir itself is not only one consolidated subtle envelope but it is further composed of many subtle sub-layers. Each layer, deeper we go the more subtle the layer becomes. It has seven sub-layers, one inside the other. Each layer holds its own record of the soul's journey. The first layer on surface holds the present life. The second layer holds the life immediately preceding this one. As one moves further inward, one moves backward through the lifetimes. Beyond the sukshma sharir is the karan sharir (causal body), the causal body, which has seven layers of its own — and there in the karan sharir, the records run back over far greater spans of time, may be 1000 past life's back or more.

This is the structure of human souls on earth into which the subtle beings like bhoot,pret, pisach etc. enter to fulfil their cravings. Their level of penetration into subtle layer of a human soul is not random. It corresponds exactly to the kind of being they are.

Where each class of being settles

Bapuji's map is precise. A bhoot enters only the first layer of the sukshma sharir — the outermost covering. It does not go deeper. From this outer layer it can be removed without great difficulty by taking the soul to an atmosphere of positive vibes of a powerful temple.

A pret enters the second layer of the sukshma sharir. Its grip is firmer, and it is not easily dislodged.

A pishach enters the third and fourth layers, and finally the fifth — which is the innermost layer of the sukshma sharir. Once it has reached this depth, it has effectively merged with the subtle body of the person. The mind of the person is then no longer the mind of the original soul. It is the mind of the pishach. From inside, the pishach controls the body, runs the mind, and consumes the subtle energies of the person it has entered.

Many entities can enter at once. A single human body, Bapuji says, can hold many souls within it — small cells, each lodged in some part of the subtle structure. As many cells as the body has, that many souls can in principle find a place within a human body. In human body, there are millions of cells and each cell can be a place for a subtle being entered into the human body, in this way a human body can become a residence of hundreds or thousands of subtle beings like bhoot or pret or pishach.

Why the entry takes place

Why does a bhoot enter a person at all? The answer, Bapuji repeats, is vasana (gross desire/physical cravings). The bhoot has cravings that it cannot satisfy on its own without a physical body. It can only satisfy them through a body. So, it presses itself into a body that resembles, in its tendencies, what the bhoot itself once was. A bhoot having cravings for liquor prefer to enter into such a human body, who is indulged in liquor. A bhoot cravings for violence enters a body inclined to violence. A pishach of immense vikaar (vice) enters a body whose own subtle field is already heavy with vikaar.

This is why the souls own state matters so much, because they attract negative subtle beings from the atmosphere. A subtle being cannot easily hold on to a soul whose aura is filled with param light. It can only enter and hold on where its own nature finds a matching pattern. Where the vibrations of the soul are sato pradhan and full of Param Shanti, the bhoot finds no foothold.

Group entry

Bhoots also enter in groups. Bapuji is unflinching about the numbers. In a single human being, twenty, fifty, even one thousand bhoots can be lodged. Each subtle being press upon their cravings upon original soul from their own quarter. The result is that the human being, who imagines himself to be a single person with their own free will, may in fact be the meeting place of many wills, none of them their own.

This is why he speaks so seriously of the loss of independent thought. When one thousand bhoots are inside a person, what remains of that person's free will? The original wishes of the soul are erased; the cravings of the entered subtle beings take their place. The body acts as the assembly of those cravings demand.

How one is removed

Bapuji does not deny that bhoots can be removed by ordinary means in some cases. A bhoot lodged in the outer layer of the sukshma sharir can be driven out by the atmosphere of a powerful temple. A weak entity can be displaced. But a pret in the second layer will not yield to such measures. A pishach in the deeper layers cannot be removed at all by an external technique. Taking a person under the influence of a pishach to any number of temples — even to the most powerful pilgrimage places, Bapuji says — will not avail. The merge has gone too deep. The pishach will not be removed by another's effort.

There remains only one path. The original soul must itself become powerful enough — must establish itself in atma swaroop — must draw down the param light into its aura. When the aura of the soul is full of param light, the entered being cannot remain. It is dissolved by the very atmosphere of the soul itself. This is the only complete removal Bapuji describes. Other than atma Swaroop , any other means to avoid Bhoot/pret/pisach are temporary only arrangements.

The reason for vigilance

This is why the seeker is asked to be vigilant about its own thoughts. To dwell on thoughts of bhoots is to invite them. To watch endless videos about them is to draw them. Bapuji says it plainly: as you think, so you receive. The mind itself is a doorway. The seeker who thinks always of bhoots draws bhoots. The seeker who thinks always of the supreme father draws the supreme power. Each kind of thought attracts what it dwells upon. The whole orientation of the mind, in this sense, is the seeker's armour or the seeker's opening.

Chapter Six

Heart Attacks, Madness and the Subtle Pull

In the gross world, certain afflictions are spoken of in purely physical terms. The heart, it is said, has stopped. The mind, it is said, has broken. Bapuji asks us to look at these matters from another side. There is a subtle cause behind many of these events, and once that cause is named, much of what seemed mysterious becomes clear.

An important note for the reader: The spiritual perspective offered in this chapter is shared for contemplative and informational purposes only. It is not medical, psychological, or psychiatric advice, diagnosis, or treatment, and it is not a remedy, cure, or alternative therapy for any medical condition, including heart disease, mental illness, or any other ailment. Nothing in this book should be construed as a magic remedy within the meaning of the Drugs and Magic Remedies (Objectionable Advertisements) Act, 1954. Any reader experiencing symptoms of heart distress, mental disturbance, or any health condition must consult qualified medical professionals immediately and follow their advice. Readers assume full and sole responsibility for any interpretation or action taken.

The sudden heart attack

A man eats his dinner, lies down to sleep, and does not wake. His heart, it is said, simply stopped. Bapuji asks the obvious question: how did the heart simply stop suddenly without any previous symptoms? The blood does not stop on its own. The heart, when it is not well, gives many signs before it ceases. Some such sudden events, in his teaching, carry a subtle-realm dimension alongside their physical cause.

What happens, in his teaching, is this. The souls of the sukshma jagat — twenty-five, fifty, one hundred, two hundred of them — gather and become one. As one combined force, they pull the soul of the sleeping man, together with his sukshma sharir, out of the body. When the soul is pulled out in this way, the heart at once stops. This stoppage is what we call a heart attack. The body has not failed of itself. The soul has been drawn from it, and the body has fallen behind.

After the soul is taken in this manner, the very souls who pulled it out keep it under their control. The man's subtle existence is now in their possession. From the standpoint of the gross world, the man has died of natural causes. From the standpoint of the subtle world, he has been seized.

The exception that proves the rule

Bapuji is careful to add that not every cessation of heartbeat is of this kind. There are heart conditions of the body itself; there are warnings the body gives, and there are illnesses that proceed by their own course. In certain cases of sudden stopping — the stopping in sleep, the stopping without warning — there is, in his teaching, also a subtle-realm dimension that operates alongside the physical cause.

The mental hospitals

The same teaching extends to mental disturbance. Those whom the world calls mad — those who have lost their connection with ordinary thought — are, in his vision, not only suffering from a defect of brain chemistry. Alongside the medical condition, the sukshma sharirs of many such patients have, he says, also been overrun by influences from the subtle realm. The bhoots and prets that have entered have merged with the inner subtle layers, and from there they further disturb the mind.

External treatment, in such cases, can manage the surface only to a limited extent. While the body is restrained or sedated, the entered being may grow silent for a time. Outwardly the patient seems calm. Those around them say the entity has gone. In truth, the entity has often only become quiet in the subtle layer. When the conditions return, the entity may become active again. Medical care addresses the physical and chemical aspect; the subtle dimension must be addressed by the soul-work that Bapuji teaches.

Possession in everyday life

This explains many things that seem inexplicable in the affairs of ordinary people. The sudden change of conduct in a person — the sudden craving for liquor where none existed before, the sudden violence in a gentle nature — these are signs of the entry of a being from the subtle realm. Bapuji says one can recognise such an entry by the conduct alone. The behaviour will become vasana-yukt (saturated with cravings) — saturated with cravings of a kind that did not belong to the original soul. The being will demand: give me liquor, give me this food, give me that. The original soul does not speak in such tones.

The reach of the subtle pull

Even those at the very top of public life are not exempted from such happenings. There have been, in history, persons in positions of authority whose own souls had effectively weakened, while other souls had entered them and acted through their bodies. Bapuji draws a parallel with the ancient principle of parakaya-pravesha, by which a highly evolved being is said to be able to enter the body of another for a span of time and afterwards withdraw. If a sato-pradhan being could enter and depart a human body in this fashion, far more easily can the bhoots and *pret*s do the same. Any soul that has weakened in its own swaroop may, in this way, be overlaid by other subtle beings, and those beings then express themselves through that body.

The reason these things must be known

These teachings are sober. They are not given to alarm the reader. They are given so that those who have ears for them may understand the full depth of what surrounds human life. The subtle realm acts upon the gross realm at every point. The body that suddenly fails, the mind that suddenly breaks, the powerful figure who suddenly turns — these are not random events. They have causes, and the causes lie in a layer of reality that most never look at.

To know this is not to fall into fear. It is, on the contrary, to be released from a kind of helplessness. Once the cause is known, the cause can be addressed. The protection is the same protection Bapuji has named throughout: the soul established in its Swa Swaroop (pure soul consciousness), the aura sealed in param light, the steady outpouring of Param Shanti vibrations. Where these prevail, the subtle pull cannot hold on. Where these prevail, the body governs as per the free will of its own master.

Chapter Seven

The Two Kinds of Bhoots and the Subtle War

There is a teaching in this knowledge that may surprise the reader: bhoots are not all the same in nature, even among themselves. They differ by the inner sanskaar of the soul. The bhoot that carries the inner light of true knowledge and the bhoot that has fallen into deep ignorance — these are not interchangeable. Souls of different inner orientation behave differently. They wield different degrees of force. They have different effects upon the world.

The bhoot of refined sanskaar

The bhoot of refined sanskaar, Bapuji says, is timid. He repeats the word: very timid. Why is this so? Because such a bhoot still carries within it the awareness of the law of karma. The fear of the consequences of action is alive within it. Even as a bhoot, the inheritance of that knowledge persists. The being of refined sanskaar is restrained by it.

The bhoot of degraded sanskaar

The bhoot of degraded sanskaar — the bhoot in which the inner law of karma has been forgotten — is not so restrained. Such bhoots, in his teaching, are dangerous. Wherever in the long history of this world acts of great destruction or violence have taken place, those acts were not the work of human beings acting alone. Subtle beings of like sanskaar stood with them, pressing upon them from within, while the more refined bhoots withdrew in fear. The principle is being stated about the nature of souls and the alignment of their cravings; it is not a comment on any particular community, nation, faith, or period of history.

Wherever, in any age, repeated cycles of destruction have unfolded, the alignment of the subtle realm with the violence of the human will has played its part. Without such alignment, repeated harm of that scale would not have been possible. The principle extends to every form of pressure that seeks to draw a soul away from its own swaroop — whether through fear, through inducement, or through subtle suggestion. Souls that have neither inner strength nor knowledge of these laws are more easily moved by such forces. The teaching points to the law of the soul; it makes no charge against any particular community, religion, region, or organisation, all of which are spoken of with full respect.

The reason this knowledge of subtle realm matters

Bapuji is not telling these things to inflame anyone. He is telling them so that the seeker understands what is actually unfolding behind the visible movements of history. The conflicts in the human world are not only conflicts between human beings. They are also conflicts between the subtle beings of different traditions/religions/sanskaar/creators, working through the bodies of their respective peoples. To see only the surface is to misunderstand the cause.

The descent of the refined bhoots

And yet a change is now under way. The refined bhoots, Bapuji says, are descending from the high subtle layers above the Himalayas. They have been told to come down. Above the snowline of those mountains, in great spheres of subtle power, billions and trillions of souls have been engaged in long tapasya, seeking to ascend. Now the order has been given for many of these to descend. Their task is to dissolve the cravings of the degraded bhoots wherever such cravings are found, and to assist in their liberation.

The refined bhoot does not, of itself, harm or destroy a bhoot of contrary nature. It is, in his telling, not in its disposition. But it has now been instructed: where the degraded bhoot is found, draw away the cravings that bind it. Some, he says, were even told they could absorb the weaker among them, but the refined disposition refuses this; let it suffice to draw away their pull. So, the work of cleansing in the subtle realm has begun. Wherever a degraded bhoot is lodged, the refined bhoot will enter that subtle layer and dissolve the craving that holds it. Or it will gather such bhoots into a sphere of power and grant them mukti (liberation). By either means, the work proceeds.

The Himalayas as the seat of tapasya

The Himalayas, in this teaching, are not merely mountains. They are filled — saturated — with the spheres of souls in tapasya. Above the visible peaks, in subtle layers, billions of souls work towards their ascent. From those reservoirs, the descent is now ordered. This land itself, in this view, is shielded by an extraordinary subtle resource that few other regions possess.

Drugs, addiction, and the bhoot trade

The same teaching extends to the worldwide growth of intoxicants. Why, Bapuji asks, are drugs and addictive substances spreading so far and so fast in the present age? The answer, in his framing, is the work of bhoots inside human bodies. The bhoot, without a gross body of its own, must use a body to drink, to smoke, to consume. The widespread use of intoxicants is, in this teaching, in significant measure a great activity of subtle beings in disguise. Twenty-five, fifty, one hundred bhoots can enter a single user of intoxicants and press their cravings upon that body.

The same logic applies to certain narrow tantric rituals in which bottles of liquor are offered as part of the rite. Such rituals are not the practice of mainstream worship, which is conducted in purity and devotion, but belong to a small and harmful sub-stream. Who, Bapuji asks, drinks the liquor that is poured in such tantric rites? It is consumed by the bhoots that the tantrik has drawn into that place through his practice. The tantriks who are seen drinking large quantities at once are not drinking alone. A hundred or two hundred bhoots have entered them, and the consumption is shared. This is said not to cast aspersion on any place of worship or any tradition of devotion, but only to warn the seeker against the narrow tantric streams that operate within the bhoot-pret system.

Black thread, charm, and the system of bhoots

Even the small charms — the black thread, the ash, the kaja, the marked needle — operate, in this teaching, within the same system. A tantrik gives a black thread to a person; a bhoot of the tantrik watches over that person; another bhoot, seeing the thread, knows that this body is already under guard, and withdraws. The charm has not driven anything away by its own substance. It has merely signalled, within the network of bhoots, that this body is taken under the control of tantrik. This is the subtle politics behind what looks like superstition. Now this is a very dangerous business.

The conclusion

The seeker is therefore asked to look at the surface conflicts of the world with another set of eyes. What is fought on the surface is, very often, the visible expression of an alignment in the subtle layer. The change that Bapuji proclaims now under way — the descent of the refined bhoots, the dissolution or liberation of the cravings that bind the degraded bhoots, and the gradual lightening of the world's atmosphere — is unfolding in that subtle layer first. The visible events of the years to come will be its natural outcome. The teaching looks always to the inner change of the soul, not to the displacement or replacement of any community or institution in the outer world.

Chapter Eight

Tantriks, Sacrifice and the Trade in Subtle Energy

There is a darker face of the subtle world, and Bapuji does not shrink from describing it. There are beings, both human and subtle, that subsist on the energies of others. Sacrifice, in its grossest forms, is one of their tools. The trade in subtle energy is older than any modern doctrine of magic, and it remains active today, in various places of the world.

The trade in soul energy

There are, in this world, certain dark rites — spoken of in many ancient cautions — in which the prize sought is not the body of the victim but the soul's power. The energy of any soul whose life is cut short in such a rite is drawn into the one to whom the offering was made, or into the one who performs it. Such acts are wholly prohibited by the law of every land and condemned by the conscience of every sincere tradition. This book describes their existence only so that the seeker may understand the gravity of the warning, and may never come anywhere near such practices — neither as participant, witness, nor curious onlooker. To be even near such acts is to draw the gravest possible bondage upon one's own soul. Nothing in this teaching may, under any circumstance, be read as describing, endorsing, or providing instruction in any such rite.

This is what is meant when one speaks of bali in this idiom. The body is one part of the matter. The soul is the other, and the other is what is actually wanted. Those who take part in such practices are often themselves already under the influence of pishachs and beings of vikar; the outer act is itself an offering to a subtle being inhabiting the one who acts.

The reading of the sukshma sharir

There is a softer side of the same trade. The man who tells the future in a small village, the woman who sees back into past lives, the so-called psychic who delivers messages from those who have died — these too operate within the system of bhoots, but along less destructive lines.

Bapuji explains the mechanism with care. Every human being's sukshma sharir contains a record. The first layer of the aura holds the events of this life. Behind it lies the layer of the previous life. Behind that, the life before. Each layer holds its own data. The bhoot or pret who has the power to enter these layers can read the data and report it back. A bhoot of greater power enters more deeply and reads further. A few can enter even the seventh layer of the sukshma sharir and bring out a hundred lifetimes; some can read into the karan sharir, where the records run for billions of years.

This is how, he says, the predictions of the future are also given. The future of a person is not entirely unwritten. Much of what is to come is already inscribed in the deeper layers of the subtle and causal bodies, drawn from the karmic accumulations of the soul. A pret or pishach with sufficient power can enter those layers, read the inscription, and through a medium speak it aloud. Whether the medium operates in one region of the world under one name, or in another region under a different name, the underlying mechanism is the same.

Charms, threads, and other practices

Whether it is the various physical implements used in tantric ritual, or the long preparation of a charm, the work in every case takes place in the subtle dimension. The charm itself is only a marker. The bhoots and prets behind the tantrik do the work. They enter and exit human body; in fact subtle entities cause the disturbance what we witness physically, this is termed as the tantrik's power; they remove what was placed there by another tantrik's bhoots. This is a fight between tantriks and their Bhoot allegiance. None of this is, in Bapuji's teaching, a settled remedy to get freedom from subtle entities. The dance of bhoots from one home to another continues unbroken.

Why this is not the path to freedom from pain and misery

It is for these reasons that Bapuji is so emphatic that the path of the tantrik is not a path. To go to a tantrik for relief from a household haunting is to invite a fresh family of bhoots into one's own home. Here only group of Bhoot are exchanged, one tantrik's bhoots will replace those that have been driven out. The transfer is the entire transaction. There is no relief from hunting in this process. There is only an exchange of one occupation for another.

There is, in this teaching, only one resolution. It is to make the soul itself powerful. The aura of param light, once kindled in a soul, dissolves the cravings of the bhoots that draw close to it. They cannot remain. Their pull cannot fasten. The soul becomes its own protection.

The connection with foreign practices

The same logic, Bapuji notes, governs certain advanced experimental work conducted in the world today. There the work is carried out at a different level, with the cooperation of beings of higher subtle force; some of it is constructive, much of it is experimental. Behind much of modern research, in his vision, sit beings of the sukshma jagat contributing inputs to those engaged in the work. None of this is divorced from the subtle realm. All of it occurs within it. No specific country, agency, institution, or individual is named or implied; the principle is being stated in general terms only.

The seeker's response

The seeker who hears these things should not be paralysed by them. They are described not as a weight upon the conscience, but as an explanation for what was previously confusing. The seeker of truth is asked, simply, not to participate. Do not visit the tantrik. Do not visit any grave or shrine out of mere curiosity, for there one acquires bonds. Do not place hopes in charms. Place belief and hope, instead, in the steady cultivation of one's own Swaroop (pure soul consciousness). There — and only there — is the protection that does not transfer the problem to another house.

Chapter Nine

Naga Lok and the Lower Realms

Beneath the earth there are worlds that do not show themselves. Bapuji speaks of seven patal loks — seven layers of subterranean realm, each below the next. The names are atal, vital, sutal, talatal, mahatal, rasatal, patal. Below these seven, in his teaching, were once fifty-five crore fragments of nark (hell) — the regions of hell — though these too have undergone transformation in the great cycles of dissolution.

How a soul reaches these realms

The path is not arbitrary. A soul of svarga lok that falls becomes a human being. A human being that turns vikari falls further, descending through the patal loks. As it falls and falls, the soul's form itself changes. At a certain depth the soul takes the form of a serpent. The deva of the upper realms has, by this descent, become the naga (serpent) of the lower.

Why the naga is honoured

This explains, Bapuji says, why the naga is honoured by the people of the gross world. The naga is not a separate creature unconnected to the higher pantheon. The naga is the same deva who has descended. The naga retains some of the powers of its original station. People worship it as nag devata (serpent deity) so that it may not trouble them. The reverence is partly an acknowledgment of what the naga once was, and partly an attempt to keep at bay what it could now do.

Indra, too, would become a naga

To make the principle plain, Bapuji speaks even of Indra, the king of the devatas. Were Indra to fall into patal lok (subterranean realm) — were even Indra's father to fall there — they too would become nagas. The atmosphere of patal lok is itself such that any soul which enters it takes that form. The naga lok is the world of the vayu element in its lower configuration; whoever arrives there takes its shape.

And from there, when at last that soul rises again, it takes birth on earth in the naga yoni. Some of the great snakes of this earth, in his telling, are the descended devatas in their long return journey. From there, gradually, the yonis change again — the soul climbs the long ladder back.

The quiet emptying of the lower realms

Bapuji also says that the patal loks are slowly emptying. The asuras (demon-souls) who lived there are being released; many are taking human form on this earth. This is part of why the human population of the present age is so large, and why so much asuric tendency runs through it. The maya (illusion), the corruption, the great accumulations of wealth seized by sin — these, Bapuji says, are the marks of the asuras who have come up from nether world. The maya was always spread by the asur. It is being spread again now, on a scale this earth has not seen.

To end the spread of negative creation, the great dissolutions(maha-kalp-pralay) return. The half-dissolution, the dissolution, the kalp-pralaya (great dissolution at the end of one day of Brahma), the maha-kalp-pralaya (great dissolution at the level of the multiverse) — each plays its role in the larger cycle. The age in which we now live is the age in which much that was hidden is rising to the surface. The seeker who understands the cycle does not despair at what is unfolding. The unfolding itself is part of the law.

The fragments of nether world and the asteroids

Bapuji even links these subtle teachings to what science now sees in the heavens. The fifty-five crore fragments of nether world that once existed, he says, are connected to the orbiting fragments now seen in our solar system. The asteroids that drift around Jupiter and circle through the system in their many paths — these are, in his teaching, what those fifty five crore fragments of nether world became. The shape of the bramand (solar system) changes. The speed of the sun has shifted. The whole architecture of our solar system is itself a slow transformation; what once was nether world is now drifting matter; what once was vibrant has dissolved; what now seems silent will yet take new forms.

Why this knowledge is given

These teachings are not given so that the seeker may dwell on the lower realms or on the asteroidal traces of an older creation. They are given so that the seeker may grasp the full scope of the world they inhabit. The earth is not a small island in space; it is a station in a vast architecture, with worlds above it and worlds below it, with descents and ascents proceeding ceaselessly through it. The seeker who is conscious of this scope is less easily seized by the small frights and small ambitions of the surface.

The point of return

And the message is the same as in every chapter of this teaching. The descent into the patal loks (nether world) took place because of vasana (craving). The fall into the form of the naga took place because of vasana. The return journey — through the snake, through the human, towards the deva once more — proceeds only as the soul receives param gyan and casts off its bondages. There is no other lever. The vasana brought the soul down. The param gyan, with the param light, draws the soul back up.

The seeker is therefore asked to look at the lower worlds without horror, and to look at the higher worlds without enchantment. Both are stations. Both are passing. The end of every soul's journey is the niraakaari Paramdham, from where the soul originated. Until that ending is reached, every layer in between is only a place through which the soul travels.

Chapter Ten

Aliens — Beings of Param Tattva

Among the beings that visit this earth, the alien holds a particular place. Bapuji is asked directly whether the aliens and the bhoots have any connection, and his answer is precise. They do not belong to the same order/category of souls. They are, in his teaching, of a different substance altogether.

Three tattvas, and a fourth that is finer

The bhoot, the pret and the pishach are constituted of three tattvas: akash, vayu and agni. These are the three lighter elements of the five-element gross world. The bhoot's body is woven of these three. It is a real body, but it is a body of the lighter end of the elemental scale.

The alien, by contrast, is a being of param tattva — the supreme element, finer than the five elements of which our own bodies are made. Between three tattvas and param tattva, Bapuji says, there is the difference of earth and sky. The aliens are not a higher class of bhoot. They are entirely outside that order. Their craft, their bodies, their instruments — all are made of param tattva, and that is why no one in this gross world can detect them. Even the bhoot cannot see them.

Mutual visibility

The relations of visibility are simple. As a human being made of five gross elements cannot see the beings made of three subtle ones, so the bhoot, made of three tattvas, cannot see the alien, made of param tattva. The aliens, however, can see everything below them. They see the bhoots clearly, walking and moving among us. They see the human beings. They observe the entire architecture of this world from a station to which our instruments cannot rise.

Why the aliens come

The aliens, Bapuji says, do not come to control. They do not enter human bodies as the bhoots do. They have their own intentions, and many of them are constructive. Some well-disposed aliens, with established connections to certain individuals, come to inspire — to guide gifted human beings toward scientific instruments, toward useful inventions, toward beneficial formulations. Many of the constructive advances of science and medicine on this earth today, he says, were arrived at with such guidance. Behind much of modern research, beings of the sukshma jagat work alongside human researchers; aliens, too, contribute their inputs to that work.

Alien observation and study

Bapuji acknowledges, without elaborating beyond what is needed, that the alien presence in this world is real and that aliens conduct their own observations of life on this planet from beyond the gross instruments of human science. Their study is largely directed at the constitution of life forms, the inner resonance of certain species, and the patterns that emerge across the natural world. From these observations, in his vision, certain insights flow into modern research. No specific country, location, agency, or institution is named, identified, or implied in this teaching; the principle is being stated only in general spiritual terms.

These are not, in his framing, asuric forces. They are not actively destructive. They are, however, experimental, and not all of their experiments are benign. The seeker is asked to be aware of this layer of activity and to avoid romanticising it. The aliens, even at their most well-disposed, are not the supreme father. Their station is higher than some lower entities in subtle realm; their station is not the highest.

Why the aliens cannot save the world

It is sometimes asked whether the aliens, with their great power, will rescue the human world from the descent in which it finds itself. Bapuji says they will not. The aliens, he says, are not interested in the bhoots and prets of this earth. They will not drive them away. They observe what is happening. They study it. They do not engage in the work of cleaning the subtle realm of this planet. That work is reserved for another set of agents.

The agents of that work are the souls themselves — the awakened souls established in atma swaroop, drawing down the param light through the channel of their own being. No alien, however advanced, can perform this work in their place. The transformation of the earth's atmosphere is an effort to be carried out by the awakened souls of the earth. Awakened means those souls are awakened to the highest supreme being i.e. Almighty Authority. The aliens are mere observers. The transformation is the duty of the supremely awakened souls.

Will a machine ever show the bhoots?

Bapuji is asked whether some scientific instrument will yet to be made that can detect the subtle entities (bhoots/pret/pisach etc.) and renders them visible to all. He answers that no such device has yet been made, and that one is not expected. The route to seeing the bhoots is not through machinery. It is through the establishment of the soul in atma swaroop. When the soul is so established, it will see the bhoots wherever they are. Until then, the gross instruments cannot capture what does not lie within their range. The aliens themselves, made of supreme elements, are not either the inventors of such a machine which can detect subtle entities; the bhoots, made of gross air, fire and ether elements, are not subjects of interest for Aliens. The proper instrument, in the end, is the soul itself, through which subtle world can be directly witnessed.

The right relationship

The seeker is therefore asked to hold a calm relation with the matter of aliens. They exist. They are real. Their craft is real. Their guidance, in some cases, has shaped the science of the present age. None of this is to be denied. And yet none of it is the seeker's path. The path of the seeker passes neither through the alien craft nor through the alien instruction. It passes through the steady cultivation of the Swa Swaroop (pure soul consciousness), the steady widening of the aura, the steady offering of Param Shanti vibrations. The aliens may watch this work. The aliens cannot do this work. Only the awakened soul can.

Chapter Eleven

The Layers Above — From Two Hundred Kilometres Outward

When the human being dies and the body is left behind, the soul does not, in most cases, simply rise beyond earth's gravity field. Bapuji's teaching about the journey of the soul through the layers above this earth is one of the most precise sections of his exposition of the sukshma jagat. He gives the layers in their actual measurements, and he gives the conditions under which a soul may, with effort, pass from one to the next higher subtle realm.

Why the soul cannot easily ascend

Around this earth, Bapuji says, the gravitational pull extends to about two hundred kilometres. Within this two-hundred-kilometre layer, the souls of those who left the body without the appropriate inner clearing are gathered. These are mayavi (bound to illusion) atmās — souls still bound to maya, still full of unfulfilled longing, still attached to the home and to the relations they left behind.

Their bodies, made of three subtle tattvas, contain a heaviness — the heaviness of the vayu tattva, weighed down by craving. The earth's gravity holds upon every element, and it holds upon the vayu of the subtle body. To cross the two hundred kilometres of earth's gravity field requires effort. It is not achieved automatically. Until the true and sincere effort has been made, the soul remains in this lowest belt — wandering between the home, the temple of its tradition, and the few places it has known.

The effort of the seeker in the subtle

How does a soul cross the two-hundred-kilometre layer? It must perform purushartha (spiritual effort). It must hear, in some way, the instruction: forget the body, forget all the bodily relationships. It must turn its longing inward and form one strong intention — the wish to deep dive into the supreme subtle world of creation (sukshma jagat). When that wish is strong enough, and the cravings of the human life have fallen away, a guru of the subtle world becomes available, and through that guru's assistance the soul crosses the boundary.

This is the first ascent: from the surface of the earth to two hundred kilometres.

The subsequent layers

Beyond two hundred kilometres lies the next layer, extending to five hundred kilometres. Here are the ashrams and the world of austerities (Tapasya) of the sukshma jagat. Here many sadhus and saints conduct their disciplines, and they assist the souls who have just arrived to perfection their tapasya. The soul that enters this layer is taught further; it remains for as long as it needs; it gathers strength.

From five hundred kilometres there is a further layer — to one thousand kilometres. From one thousand to two thousand. The layers grow as one rises. Then ten thousand kilometres. Then a hundred thousand kilometres. At every layer there are guides, ashrams, instructions. At each, the soul is told something more for gaining more power in soul. The soul that wishes to keep rising is given the means to keep rising.

The first warning of the subtle masters

There is one warning that recurs. The soul that has begun to rise must not look downward. If it looks down toward the maya it has left, the maya pulls it back. The looking-down is itself the descent. The mind moves first; the soul follows. Therefore, in every layer, the masters say: do not remember the world you have left.

The presence of every tradition

Bapuji is asked whether the masters in these subtle layers belong only to one tradition. He answers that this is not the case. In the lower layers, every tradition is represented. To a range of about one crore kilometres — about ten million kilometres — there are ashrams of every faith. There are houses of worship of every tradition that exists upon the earth, in the subtle realm too. They have all extended themselves into this region, and the souls of each tradition gather in their respective places after the body is shed.

This is why, Bapuji says, the rule of “ant mati so gati” holds with precision. This is a universal spiritual principle. The mind of the dying person turns toward what it has held most strongly in his/her life, and the souls of that same tradition/cult in subtle world come to receive the dying person. A soul that held to its guru receives the welcome of that guru’s subtle ashram. A soul that held to the founding teacher of its own tradition receives the welcome of that teacher’s subtle counterpart. The geography of the lower subtle layers mirrors, almost exactly, the geography of belief on the surface of the earth.

From sixteen crore kilometres outward

Bapuji extends the measurement. From the sun, he says, the earth is about fifteen crore kilometres distant. Adding this to the earth’s own outward range, the lower belt of the sukshma jagat extends in some sense to sixteen crore kilometres around the sun. Within this immense radius, every ashram of the gross world has its corresponding ashram in the subtle realm. Every guru on earth came, in the natural ordering, from a subtle ashram of the same lineage. They descend to take birth, and the lineage above continues alongside the lineage below.

The angels and the dharmanaths

The welcoming subtle figures who come to receive a dying soul belong, in this teaching, to the lower subtle layers and correspond to the broader category of subtle beings described in this book. Different traditions of the world describe such welcoming figures under various names, and each tradition’s usage is respected. The teaching of Bapuji simply maps these welcomers to their corresponding subtle layers. The truly higher beings of the causal world — which various traditions describe in their own most exalted terms — dwell at a far finer level and do not, ordinarily, descend to this earth.

The welcomers who arrive belong to the same subtle layer to which the dying soul’s own orientation has prepared it. They draw the soul toward the corresponding subtle ashram, where the soul recognises a familiar atmosphere and is comforted. The principle is universal and applies, with full respect, to every faith and every tradition.

Beyond all traditions

Above the layer of the dharmanaths there is, however, another order altogether. Beyond all the religious ashrams, beyond all the lineages, there are masters who are dharma-jaat (lineage and tradition) se pare — who are beyond all bondages of belief and sect. To reach them, the soul must cross many layers. Most souls do not; they find a comfortable seat in their tradition and stay. The few who continue rising — who hear the teaching that even the lineage is a station, that beyond the lineage is the boundless — receive new guides at every height, and they keep ascending. Such souls move toward the niraakaari Paramdham, where the soul has its origin and where it has its true home.

Chapter Twelve

Liberation Through Param Shanti Vibrations

All that has been described of the subtle world points, in the end, to a single act. The seeker of truth is to become free from all types of subtle pull, and is to assist others in being freed from all types of illusion and bondages. This is not an act of force. It is not an act of ritual. It is the act of becoming what the soul originally was. Bapuji calls this becoming atma swaroop, and the means he places before the seeker is the path of the param light and the Param Shanti vibrations.

Why power alone is not the answer

It might be supposed that what is needed is a great quantity of power — power to overcome the bhoots, power to drive away the prets, power to dissolve the pishachs. Bapuji corrects these explanations concisely. Power alone, he says, does not work. Power requires something such as an instrument/medium through which it will work.

That something is the vibration of Param Shanti. Power and the vibration of Param Shanti must travel together. Where the param light enters with the vibration of supreme peace, it acts. Where power enters without that vibration, it does not bear the same effect. The seeker is therefore asked to cultivate not only strength of soul but also the steady atmosphere of supreme peace within and around the soul.

✧ “Power alone does not work. With the vibrations of Param Shanti, that power will go — and only then will it act.”

— Bapuji Dasbrathbbhai Patel

The aura sealed in light

The first protection Bapuji gives is the sealing of the aura. As the soul becomes established in its Swa Swaroop, the aura is filled with param light. When the aura is sealed in this way, no subtle entity can penetrate it. A bhoot that comes near is not pushed away — it is dissolved by the very atmosphere of the soul. The vasana that constituted it cannot remain in the presence of that light. The being is granted what it had no other means of attaining: mukti, liberation.

This is why the awakened soul becomes, by its mere existence, a worker of liberation. The bhoots that come to such a soul liberate from the body of bhoot. They are released into the supreme light from which all souls were originally created. The seeker has not driven them out into another house; the seeker has set them free permanently.

The home as a lighthouse

Bapuji extends the practice from the soul outward. The home of the seeker of supreme truth is to be made a lighthouse. The atmosphere of the home is to be sealed in the same param light as the aura of the soul. Where the home is sealed in this way, the bhoots cannot enter. Those that enter are dissolved. The home becomes a place of refuge — a station of liberation in the heaviness of this kali yug.

This is the work of the seeker of supreme truth who steps out into the world. Wherever the seeker of supreme truth goes, the aura of light goes with them. Wherever they linger, the place is touched. Wherever they speak, their words carry the vibration of supreme peace. Slowly, by this presence, the atmosphere of the world itself is shifted towards higher dimension. This is the natural law of the transformation Bapuji proclaims.

Do not fear the bhoot-pret

From this teaching follows a simple instruction. Do not fear the bhoot-pret. The seeker of supreme truth who has begun the cultivation of the Swa Swaroop (Pure Soul consciousness), however small the beginning, has already entered a path that the bhoot-pret cannot dominate. To fear them is to give them a foothold; to think of them is to draw them; to argue with them is to engage with them. The seeker is asked simply to turn toward the supreme father. To remember the supreme father is to receive power. To remember the bhoot is to attract the bhoot. The orientation of the mind is therefore to be guarded with due attention.

The work of the behad ki atma

Bapuji speaks of the behad ki atma (soul of limitless capacity) — the soul of limitless capacity. To these souls he assigns the special work of the present age. The first task he names is the liberation of the bhoots and pretis. This, he says, is to be the foremost work of the awakened souls of this earth. Wherever the awakened soul moves, wherever it sits, wherever it sends its vibration, the bhoot-pret are released. As more and more such souls awaken, the atmosphere of the earth shifts; the heaviness of the kali yug at last begins to retreat; the atmosphere of satyug begins to draw closer.

The greater scale of the work

Bapuji also extends the work to scales beyond this earth. The soul of one or two kala (unit of soul-power) has limited reach. The soul that has drawn down the power of ten kala is sealed in a different aura. The soul that has reached for the powers of forty, fifty, a hundred kala — the soul that lays down the vibrations of two hundred kala into the multiverse — liberates not only the bhoots of this earth, but the low power souls of bramands, of maha bramands, of param maha bramands. Bapuji speaks of vibrations of twenty kala of Param Shanti reaching into bramands of one to four kala and granting liberation to all those low power souls. So far does the work of an awakened seeker extend, when the vibration carried is the vibration of supreme peace.

◆ “Increase the power of the soul. Bring the param light into the aura of the soul. From there, even a weak soul that comes close will dissolve and be set free.”

— Bapuji Dasbrathbbhai Patel

The new way

Bapuji presents this as a new path — a fresh research, in his own words. The old way, recorded in the ancient scriptures, spoke of the dissolutions, the kalp-pralaya (dissolution), the maha-kal-agni (great fire of dissolution) in which everything would burn and be reduced to ashes. That way, he says, was performed once. It is recorded in every creator. Creator like Shiva, Maha Shiva, all does not have any knowledge other than causing great dissolution of their own creation. But there is a second way available now — a way that does not require burning. The new way is the slow conversion of tattva into param tattva, of param tattva into param light, by the steady action of the Param Shanti vibrations.

This is the way the seeker is now offered. It is gentle. It does not destroy. It transforms. It liberates. It returns each soul, gradually, to the divine light of which it was originally formed. It does not require that the world be ended. It requires only that enough souls awaken — and that they hold, steady and unbroken, the vibration of supreme peace.

The closing call

This is, then, the call with which the teaching closes. Become atma swaroop. Take the power of the supreme father into the soul. Seal the aura in param light. Make the home a lighthouse. Let the vibration of Param Shanti go forth without ceasing, day and night. Do not fear the bhoot-pret. Do not seek their removal through tantriks or charms. Liberate them by your own light, and let the heaviness of this earth grow lighter by your steady presence.

The whole law of the subtle world points to this single conclusion. There is one path, and the seeker of supreme truth has been shown it. Seeker of supreme truth is the seed soul who spreads the vibration of transformation. From there, in time, the world itself is transformed. This is the mission of the behad ki atma. This is the meaning of Param Shanti.

Glossary

This glossary draws upon the standard cumulative master glossary of Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay, with new terms added that are particular to this book. Definitions are kept brief and aligned with Bapuji's own usage.

Akari

Subtle form. Not visible to the physical eye, this is a form created by energy and constituted of supreme subtle elements. The first form a soul takes when it loses its full divine-light state.

Akash

Ether — the finest of the five elements; one of the three tattvas of the body of a bhoot.

Ant mati so gati

The ancient law that the orientation of the mind at the moment of death determines the destination of the soul.

Ardh-pralaya

Half-dissolution. The cyclical clearing that takes place at the close of every kalyug, when the heavy beings are frozen and the new satyug is born.

Asur

A soul that has fallen into the seven patal loks through prolonged tamo pradhan tendencies. The asuras are the source of the maya, corruption and great accumulations of wrongful wealth in the world.

Atma

Soul. The original, formless source of energy in every living being. The pure soul, in its true state, is divine light.

Atma swaroop

The state of the soul established in its own true nature. The condition the seeker is asked to attain through gyan, yog and self-purification.

Avyakt

The invisible subtle and supreme-subtle world of creation.

Behad

Without limit; boundless. Used in contrast with had, the limited.

Behad Gyan

The supreme knowledge of the limitless creation, from beginning to end. Knowledge revealed by Bapuji that is not written in any earlier book and not given by any earlier teacher.

Behad ka Baap

The Supreme Father — the master creator of this limitless vast creation. Unique, only one, the ultimate source of power of all creations.

Behad ki atma

A soul of limitless capacity, constituted of param prakash and param maha tattva. These souls have the power to liberate others through their presence and vibration.

Behad ki Duniya

The boundless, limitless creation. The infinite-kala creation whose size is immeasurable and whose power is also immeasurable.

Bhakti Marg

The path of devotion — the way to reach one's ishta dev through surrender, chanting, fasting and ritual.

Bhavatit

Beyond all feelings and emotions; the still state of the soul that is no longer disturbed by the movements of the surrounding world.

Bhoot

The simplest class of subtle being. Carries low vasana. Dwells in homes, jungles or temples. Enters only the outermost layer of the sukshma sharir of a person.

Bhuvarlok

The realm of the gandharvas, kinnaras and yakshas, just above this earth in the cosmic order.

Bramand

Solar system. Our solar system is one Bramand. (See LiM glossary, entry 29.)

Brahm-rakshas

A being of high spiritual knowledge who acts as a rakshas. The same as a shaitan in Bapuji's teaching.

Causal world

World of creation which is finer than the subtle world; made of supreme subtle elements.

Chudail

A dangerous female bhoot. Most often a soul that has left the body in tragic circumstances with unfulfilled longing, and who carries the great force of that vasana into the subtle realm.

Devata

A being of svarga lok. The devatas of the higher worlds are bhogi — they have their own enjoyments — and even they are subject to the law of descent.

Dharana

The final stage of behad gyan, when the soul, after regular practice of behad gyan and yog, gradually transforms its sanskaar and emerges in its true divinity. Soul itself becomes the embodiment of knowledge.

Dharmanath

The master or chief of a religious tradition in the subtle world. Each tradition on the surface of the earth has its dharmanath in the corresponding subtle ashram.

Farishta

A higher subtle being of the karan jagat (causal world). Different traditions of the world describe such beings under various names; the term is used here only in its general sense, with full respect for every tradition's usage.

Gandharva, kinnara, yaksha

Beings of bhuvarlok, the realm just above this earth in the cosmic ordering.

Gunatit / Nirgun

Beyond the three qualities of nature — sato, rajo, tamo. The pure-soul-conscious state.

Guru

A spiritual instructor who shows the right path to the soul, leading from darkness to enlightenment.

Gyan

Knowledge. In this teaching, the supreme knowledge that frees the soul from its bondage.

Gyan Daan Maha Daan

The principle that sharing knowledge is the highest charity.

Gyan Marg

The path of knowledge — striving continuously to acquire and contemplate knowledge of one's creator until the soul realises its supreme destiny.

Had

The limited. Used in contrast with behad.

Had ki atma

A common soul of limited power, whose constitution does not include param prakash.

Incarnation

A cell of a supreme soul or of a soul from a higher dimension that is used to carry out specific work on earth. Less powerful than a roop or clone.

Indra

The king of the devatas; the master of the three worlds; the chief of svarga lok. Even Indra, Bapuji says, is bhogi.

Ishta dev

The chosen deity that an individual worships throughout life.

Ishwar

The master or owner of creation. This is incorporeal Shiv.

Jeev

When souls fall to lower levels of creation with physical bodies due to uncontrolled desires, they are called jeev — animal-like beings.

Jeevan Mukti

Liberation from all karmic accounts; the state in which the soul knows its creator and dwells in blissful union with that creator.

Kaam, krodh, lobh, moh, ahankar

The five vikaars — desire, anger, greed, attachment, ego — which are the cravings the soul carries from human birth into the bhoot state.

Kala

A unit of measurement of the power of a soul or supreme soul. Like the watt for electrical power, kala is the unit of soul-power. One kala, ten kala, sixteen kala, hundred kala, two hundred kala — denotes the magnitude of energy in a creator or creation.

Kalp-pralaya

The great dissolution that takes place at the end of one day of Brahma — one thousand chatur-yugs.

Kalyug

The age of conflict and heaviness; the present age, characterised by tamo pradhan atmosphere.

Karan sharir

The causal body. Finer than the sukshma sharir, made of supreme subtle elements (akash). It has seven layers of its own and holds records that span far longer durations. Mind and karan sharir are synonyms.

Karmatit

The state of the soul that has obtained complete freedom from all karmic bondage.

Loka

A layer or dimension of creation inside a Bramand, galaxy or universe. Bhuloka, Bhuvvarlok, svarga lok, Maha-loka, Jana-loka, etc.

Maha Bramand

Galaxy. (See LiM glossary, entry 30.)

Maha-kal-agni

The great fire of dissolution by which an entire universe is reduced to its origin. Performed once already by the master of the multiverse.

Maha-kal-pralaya

The great dissolution at the level of the multiverse.

Maha Shiv

The incorporeal creator of a galaxy.

Mayavi

Bound to maya — to illusion and craving. The mayavi atma is the soul still attached to the cravings of the gross world.

Mrityu lok

The mortal world; this earth.

Mukti

Liberation. The state in which the soul is dissolved into its creator and no longer exists as a separate identity.

Naga lok

The realm of the serpents; the lowest of the patal loks. A soul that descends through the seven patal loks takes the form of the naga in this region.

Nark

Hell. Of the fifty-five crore fragments of nark that once existed, much has been transformed in the cycles of dissolution; what remains is connected to the orbital fragments now seen in our solar system.

Niraakaari

The formless, incorporeal state of the soul; the state of pure divine light.

Param atma

Supreme soul. The creator of soul. The creator state in which a soul has tremendous power to create many other souls through affirmation. Described in the ancient scriptures as Satyam Shivam Sundaram.

Param Maha Bramand

Universe. (See LiM glossary, entry 31.)

Param Maha Shiv

The incorporeal creator of a universe.

Param Maha Tattva

Supreme great element. The energy or divine brilliance irradiated around param prakash. Param tattva is created from param maha tattva.

Param Prakash

Supreme divine light. The energy or power of a soul in its incorporeal form. The state of pure soul consciousness.

Param Purush

The Akari Shiv / Maha Shiv as per the dimension of creation. The first creation of the incorporeal supreme creator. The Supreme Male Energy, always existing with his companion Shakti, the Supreme Female Energy.

Param Shanti

Supreme peace. The original state of the soul when first created. The vibration that, when carried by a soul of sufficient power, liberates the bhoots, prets and pishachs that come close to it.

Param tattva

Supreme element. Finer than the five elements of the gross world. The substance of which the bodies and craft of the aliens are composed. Just as paramanu is finer than anu, paramtattva is finer than tattva.

Paramdham

The supreme abode of a creation. The highest dimension, where the entire creation is in supreme divine-light form. The original home of the soul. Each Bramand has its paramdham; each galaxy its maha paramdham; each universe its param maha paramdham.

Patal lok

The seven layers of subterranean realm beneath this earth: atal, vital, sutal, talatal, mahatal, rasatal and patal.

Peedi

Generation of creators or supreme souls. As one moves to higher dimensions, the peedi number increases — 21 peedi, 101 peedi, 1001 peedi, 11001 peedi — and the power of the supreme soul also increases.

Pishach

A subtle being of intense vasana, capable of consuming the subtle energies of a person. Enters the third, fourth and fifth layers of the sukshma sharir and merges with the entire subtle body.

Pralay

The process of dissolution of a creation.

Pret

A subtle being of overpowering vasana. Enters the second layer of the sukshma sharir and is far more difficult to remove than a bhoot.

Puranas

Ancient literature of wisdom in story form, describing the history of creation.

Purushartha

Spiritual effort made through self-enquiry and meditation. The labour the soul must undertake to cross the gravitational pull of the lower realms and rise into the higher subtle layers.

Roop

The clone of a soul, created by a supreme soul from its own energy through affirmation. Reduces the original power of the supreme soul.

Sakari

Physical form. When the energy of the soul degenerates further, it acquires a physical form.

Sanatan Dharm

The eternal path of soul-consciousness, described in this teaching as the timeless principle of the soul's journey to its supreme source. The term is used here in its inner spiritual sense, with respect for every tradition of the world.

Sankalp / Sankalpa

Determination, intention, the affirming thought generated in a soul. The power of mind of a soul. The cause of which spandan is the effect.

Sanskar

The character of a soul; the record in its causal body. The mind of a soul works according to its sanskaar. The first step of self-transformation is to transform one's sanskaar by imbibing behad gyan.

Sato pradhan

Predominantly pure; the quality of soul and atmosphere in the satyug.

Satyug

The age of truth; the first of the four ages, in which the atmosphere of the world is sato pradhan.

Seva

Selfless service. In behad gyan, the highest service is to disseminate this supreme knowledge. One can also do service through affirmations by spreading vibrations of Param Shanti.

Shaitan

A being above even the pishach in the order of dangerousness; identical with the brahm-rakshas.

Shakti

The female counterpart of Akari Shiv. Akari Shiv first creates Akari Shakti from his energy. At galaxy level: Akari Maha Shakti. At universe level: Akari Param Maha Shakti.

Shastra

The ancient scripture; the body of recorded spiritual writings.

Shiv

The incorporeal creator of a solar system. He resides in the paramdham — the supreme abode of the solar system.

Spandan

Vibration. The effect of which sankalpa is the cause. Sankalpa and spandan are never to be conflated; the cause and the effect are distinct.

Subtle world

The world of subtle elements; the sukshma jagat.

Sukshma jagat

The subtle world. The invisible realm of subtle beings whose laws are the subject of this book.

Sukshma sharir

The subtle body, comprising ether, air and fire elements. Has seven layers, one inside the other. Each layer holds the records of one lifetime in the soul's journey.

Svarga lok

Heaven; the higher subtle realm of the devatas.

Tamo pradhan

Predominantly heavy, dark, ignorant; the quality of soul and atmosphere in the kalyug.

Tantrik

A practitioner who works with bhoots and pretis to perform charms, exorcisms and predictions. In Bapuji's teaching, the tantrik's remedies displace one set of bhoots with another and offer no settled liberation.

Tapasya

Spiritual austerity; the disciplined effort by which a soul gathers power.

Tattva

Element. The five tattvas are earth, water, fire, air and ether. The bhoot is constituted of three of these — akash, vayu and agni — without earth and water. Tattva in spiritual usage is far finer than the elements of chemistry.

Vasana

Craving; unfulfilled longing. The cause of the soul's descent into the bhoot, pret and pishach states.

Vayu

Air. One of the three tattvas of the bhoot's body.

Vikarm / Vikaar

Sin or vice committed by a soul. The five great vikaars are kaam, krodh, lobh, moh and ahankar.

Vishwa Parivartan

World transformation. The mission of Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay.

Vyakt

The visible five-element world of creation.

Yog

Spiritual union. When a soul, after acquiring behad gyan, immerses in deep love for its creator and totally forgets the physical world, this stage is called yog.

Yog Bal

The power of yog; the strength generated by the soul's union with the supreme.

Yugas

The four ages on earth: Sat-yug, Treta-yug, Dvapara-yug, Kali-yug. Together known as Chaturyug. The chaturyug repeats until maha-kal-pralaya.

THE LAWS OF THE INVISIBLE REALM

There is an unseen world beyond ordinary human perception — a subtle realm influencing thoughts, destiny and the journey of the soul.

In this profound spiritual work, Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel reveals the hidden laws of the invisible dimensions, the mysteries of subtle beings, and the supreme path to liberation through Param Shanti vibrations.
