About Bapuji

Bapuji (full name: Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly called Dadaji by the younger generation) was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. However, he spent his childhood in another village named Ambasan, also located in the Mehsana district.

In the early part of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realising the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers to realise their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times, he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy, he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, he established a spiritual institution called Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world, filled with suffering and disorder, into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt. Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as Maa, worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to eighteen hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realised through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of superconsciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji's teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the types of celestial creators across different dimensions, the creation of our solar system, galaxy, and universe, and most importantly, the transcendental knowledge of the multiverse and realities beyond it. His knowledge is supremely profound and is intended for highly evolved seekers, referred to as behad souls. According to Bapuji, these behad souls will play a key role in transforming this mortal world into an eternal divine realm.

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

— by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

This book has been compiled with reverence and care. It is our humble offering to every soul who has ever paused at the edge of life and asked the deepest of all questions: what happens after death?

From the divine discourses of Bapuji, we have drawn a complete vision of the soul's journey. The teachings here trace what happens at the moment of death, where the soul travels next, why some souls suffer while others rise, what the dissolution mean for the soul, and how every individual can prepare to return to respective supreme abode (Paramdham) — the original home of the soul.

These pages do not contain external commentary or invented interpretation. Every essential idea here has been spoken by Bapuji in his discourses, drawn from his direct spiritual vision and decades of meditation. Our role has been only to refine the presentation, so that newcomers to this knowledge can read with ease and clarity.

If even one soul finds peace in these pages, if even one fear of death is dissolved, if even one reader begins to walk the path back to their true home, then this offering has fulfilled its purpose.

Overview

This book is structured as a complete journey. It begins with the most basic question — what is death? — and unfolds outward to the very limits of cosmic understanding.

Part One explores the great question of death itself: what humanity has always asked, what death actually is, what leaves the body, and what we are made of as souls.

Part Two follows the soul's first journey after death: where it goes, what it experiences in the subtle and causal worlds, why it returns to earth, and how the law of karma shapes its path.

Part Three confronts the challenges that face the departed soul: the weight of attachment, the reality of trapped souls and haunted places, the experiences near death, and the suffering some souls undergo.

Part Four opens out into the cosmic structure of the soul's journey: the categories of souls, the long evolution and degradation through eighty-four lakh yonis, the cycles of time, and the great pralays that close cosmic ages.

Part Five reaches toward Paramdham itself: the supreme abode, the higher realms of Shivpuri and Vishnupuri, the meaning of mukti and jeevan mukti, and why true knowledge is essential for liberation.

Part Six expands into the multiverse: souls beyond earth, the reality of UFOs and advanced civilisations, the messenger souls who descend to earth, and the hidden spiritual order that watches over creation.

Part Seven addresses the present moment of human history: Kalyug, the coming Judgment Day, the future of humanity, the new divine world that is being born, and the ultimate purpose of human life.

Part Eight closes with the practical: how to prepare for death consciously, how to help souls after death, the discipline that leads to liberation, and the inner movement from fear of death to understanding of eternity.

Read with patience. Each chapter rests on the previous one. The journey of this book mirrors the soul's own great journey — beginning at the body, ending at the supreme.

PART ONE

The Great Question: What Happens After Death?

CHAPTER ONE

Humanity's Oldest Question

From the dawn of human civilisation, one question has haunted every soul: what truly happens after death? In every land, in every age, in every faith, the seeker has stood before this mystery. Bapuji teaches that this is not an ordinary question. It is the deepest question a human being can ask, because the answer reshapes everything — how we live, how we love, what we do with our days, and what we carry forward when the body falls.

Bapuji says the fear of death is the deepest fear in the human heart. People fear losing the body they have known as themselves. They fear losing the people they love. They fear the unknown space that opens when breath stops. But this fear, Bapuji says, comes from one simple cause — not knowing what the soul actually is, where it came from, and where it is going.

What appears as ending is in fact a doorway. The 5 elemental body falls, but the soul continues. Every ancient civilisation sensed this. The sages of India spoke of it directly. The scriptures of every faith point toward it. Modern researchers studying near-death experiences are now circling back to the same truth — that consciousness does not end with the body.

Bapuji explains that knowing the soul's journey is not a matter of curiosity. It is the most important knowledge any human being can hold. Without this knowledge, life spent is a misunderstanding. With this knowledge, every action takes its true place in a much greater journey. Death stops being terrifying and becomes simply a transition.

This book is offered to anyone who has stood with this question in silence. It is not theory. It is not philosophy. It is the direct knowledge that Bapuji has shared, drawn from his own divya drishti — divine vision — refined over decades of yog and tapasya. He has always said that what he teaches cannot be found in books. Many of these truths have never been written down. They come from his own inner experience and his unbroken contact with his higher self.

If you have ever stood beside a deceased loved one and wondered where they have gone or If you have ever sensed that there is something more than this five-element world — this book is for you.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mrityu se darna chhod do; jaan lo atma ka swaroop, fir mrityu ek dwar lagegi.”

“Stop fearing death; understand the nature of the soul, and death will reveal itself as a doorway.”

CHAPTER TWO

What Is Death in Reality

What is death really? In ordinary understanding, death is the end of breath, the end of heartbeat, the end of the physical body. But Bapuji says death is something quite different. Death is not the end of life- it is the soul leaving one form and beginning the next stage of its journey.

The body is made of five elements: prithvi (earth), jal (water), agni (fire), vayu (air), and akash (ether). These elements come together at birth and separate again at death. The body returns to its sources — flesh decays into earth, fluids return to water, warmth returns to fire, breath returns to air & the inner space returns to ether. Nothing of the body is destroyed; it is simply unwoven.

But the body is not the person. The body is only the outer covering. The soul is the true self what Bapuji calls a chaitanya shakti (a point of conscious energy). It is the soul that has lived inside the body, animated it, experienced through it. When the body's time is over, the soul slips out and continues.

Bapuji often gives a simple comparison. The body is like a vehicle. The soul is the driver. When the vehicle stops working, the driver does not vanish — the driver simply steps out and finds another way forward. The vehicle returns to scrap. The driver continues the journey.

From the material view, death looks like a tragedy of loss. From the spiritual view, exactly the same moment looks completely different. The soul is freed from a body that had grown old, sick, or simply finished its purpose. Two heavy elements-water & earth-fall away. The soul, lighter now, begins its next journey.

Bapuji teaches that the illusion of bodily identity is the root of all suffering at death. A person who has lived their whole life believing they are the body, experiences enormous confusion when the body stops. They do not know who they are without it. But the person who has known themselves as soul faces this same moment with calm. The body falls; awareness continues; the journey moves on certainly.

For a knowledgeable soul, Bapuji says, death is not a calamity at all but an utsav -a celebration. The bird leaves the cage; the soul flies free of the five-element shell. This is why he sometimes says that for a true gyani, the day of departure should be honoured the way we honour the day of birth-both are openings into a new world.

“Aatma ka vinaash nahi hota, sirf shareer chhoot jaata hai.”

“The soul is never destroyed; only the body is left behind.”

CHAPTER THREE

What Leaves the Body at Death

When death comes, what actually leaves the body? Bapuji explains this with great clarity. The soul departs along with what is called the subtle body--sukshma sharir--which is made of three elements: ether, air and fire.

The two heavier elements--water and earth--remain behind in the corpse. They are heavy and bound to the ground. This is why the body grows cold and still: the warmth of fire, the movement of air and the inner space of ether have departed with the soul. Within minutes the body begins its return to the elements.

Bapuji's teaching here is precise. The soul does not leave alone. It carries with it the subtle body, made of three lighter elements. Inside that subtle body lies the causal body -- karan sharir --which is storehouse of every karmic impression. Every thought, every word, every act, every feeling has been recorded there. Bapuji compares this recording to a kind of supercomputer in akash tatva, the ether element. No record is ever lost.

Along with these bodies, the soul carries every Sanskar--every impression, habit, tendency, every recorded pattern of mind it has built across many lives. A person who lived in fear carries fear forward. A person who lived in peace carries peace forward. A person who cultivated knowledge carries knowledge forward. The soul cannot escape what it has become.

The final moments of life are profoundly important. Bapuji repeatedly emphasises the ancient principle: ant mati so gati — the final thought/state of mind determines the next destination/ journey. Whatever the mind is gripping at the exact moment of departure shapes the soul's onward direction. A mind clinging to the home stays at the home. A mind clinging to a relationship stays trapped in that bond. A mind absorbed in remembrance of the supreme is carried toward the supreme.

This is why the way one lives shapes the way one dies. A life of awareness produces a death of awareness. A life of restlessness produces a restless departure. The dying moment is not random. It is the natural consequence of how the entire life was lived.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Ant mati so gati — antim soch hi atma ki agli yatra tay karti hai.”

“As is the final state of mind, so becomes the soul's next movement — the last thought decides the next journey.”

CHAPTER FOUR

Body, Subtle Layers and Soul

To understand life after death, one must first understand what a human being truly is. Bapuji explains that a person is not a single body but several layers of being, nested inside one another like coverings around a single point of light.

The first layer is the physical body -sthool sharir. It is made of all five elements: earth, water, fire, air, and ether. It is the visible body, the gross form that walks, eats, works, and acts. This is what most people identify with completely, and yet it is only the outermost shell.

Inside the physical body lies the subtle body--sukshma sharir--made of three elements: ether, air and fire. It is invisible to physical eyes but very real. The subtle body holds the mind, the emotions, the desires, the impressions (Sankara) of present life. After death, soul moves in this body through the subtle worlds.

Deeper still is the causal body-- karan sharir — made of the finest substance, akash tatva in its most refined form. The causal body is the inner storehouse. It holds the recordings of many lives. Every karma performed, every thought entertained, every sanskar developed lives here. Bapuji says this is where the karmic account is written. When a person performs an action, the recording happens first in the causal body, then ripples outward.

Bapuji often gives a deeper picture. He compares each cell of the human body to an atom. The earth and water elements form the outer electrons; the fire element corresponds to the proton; the akash tatva at the centre is the neutron — the place where all the recording is held. When the soul leaves, it carries the akash tatva of the body with it, and inside that ether is the entire karmic record of every life.

Beyond all these bodies is the soul itself — the atma — a point of pure conscious energy, a spark of divine light. This is the true self. The bodies are coverings; the soul is the wearer. Bapuji repeats this often: you are not the body. You are the soul.

Beyond even the soul, in its source, is the supreme—the formless, eternal consciousness from which souls were originally created. The journey of the soul, both during life and after death, is a movement through these layers. Liberation is the awareness of being soul, free of every covering, abiding in its source.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Aap shareer nahi hain, aap atma hain — ek chaitanya shakti.”

“You are not the body. You are the soul — a point of conscious energy.”

CHAPTER FIVE

Ant Mati So Gati* — The Final Thought Decides

Of all Bapuji's teachings about death, none is more practical than the ancient principle ant mati so gati. The final state of mind at the moment of departure decides the soul's next destination.

This principle is not metaphor. It is mechanism. Whatever the mind is holding at that one last decisive instant / micro seconds — that direction is the direction the soul will move. If the mind is fixed on the supreme, the soul moves toward the supreme. If the mind is clinging to home, possessions, money, or a relationship, the soul stays bound there. If the mind is in fear or anger, the soul departs in fear or anger and travels toward an environment that matches that vibration.

Bapuji compares the mind at death to a student in the last three or four minutes of an examination. Suddenly the student remembers what was left undone — "this answer I did not write, that section I forgot." The whole life condenses into those final moments, and whatever rises strongest is what stays. Most people, Bapuji says, have spent their lives chasing maya — possessions, relationships, status, at the end the mind cannot suddenly produce remembrance of the supreme. It produces what was practiced.

The ancients had a saying: when youth is strong, people say "I will remember God when I am old." But in old age, when the body cannot serve, the strength of the body has gone — and along with it the steadiness of mind needed for true remembrance. The remembrance must be cultivated when the body is still cooperating, not when it has begun to fail.

This is why Bapuji teaches what he calls karm yog — to live every act in the awareness of the soul, to remember the Almighty Authority in the middle of work, eating, walking, speaking. When this remembrance becomes natural during life, it becomes natural at death. The final thought is not produced in the final moment; it is produced by everything that came before.

There is also a deeper principle hidden inside ant mati so gati. Bapuji teaches that a single thought of the supreme, if it carries genuine power, can shift the soul's direction immediately. This is why true gurus and the divine teachings exist — to give the soul, even in its last moments, the chance to turn fully toward its source. But the foundation must be laid through life.

The seed must already be present for it to bloom in the final breath.

“In the final moment, only what one has practiced through the whole life will rise.”

PART TWO

The Soul After Death

CHAPTER SIX

Does the Soul Survive Death

Does the soul survive death? Bapuji answers without hesitation: yes. The soul does not die. It cannot die. It is not made of perishable matter. It is ajar amar avinashi — never aging, immortal, indestructible. What dies is the body. The soul, the chaitanya shakti, simply leaves and continues.

When the body is destroyed by fire, water or accident, the soul slips out and continues. Even in the great cosmic dissolutions — in ardh pralay, pralay, kalp pralay, the soul itself is not destroyed. There is only one form of dissolution great enough to dissolve the soul, and that is mahakal pralay; this is taken up later in the book. Also important aspect is to know level at which soul is created. This shall also be covered in later chapter.

Memory and Impressions(Sanskars) continue after death. Karmic vibrations continue. The soul that leaves the body is the very same identity that lived in the body. This continuity of identity is the reason the soul keeps progressing or falling across many lives. A soul that has cultivated peace carries that peace forward into the next life. A soul that has cultivated anger or addiction carries those habits forward as well. Death is not a fresh start; it is a continuation. What you become in this life, you remain after death.

Bapuji emphasises that this knowledge is not a matter of belief or faith. It is a fact of reality. Once a person truly knows the soul is eternal, the fear of death dissolves. Death becomes a passage, like walking from one room into another, leaving an old garment behind. The soul never lost itself; it only changed its costume.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma avinashi hai, uska vinaash kabhi nahi hota.”

“The soul is imperishable; it never undergoes destruction.”

CHAPTER SEVEN

Where Does the Soul Go — The Fourteen Lokas

Where does the soul go after death? Bapuji explains that there is not one single destination. There are multiple places. The destination depends entirely on the state of the soul at departure.

Bapuji teaches the cosmos through what the sanatan shastras call the chaudah lok — the fourteen worlds. There are seven worlds above earth and seven below. The seven above, ascending in vibration, are bhulok (the earth realm), bhuvarlok, swarglok, maharlok, janlok, taplok, brahmapuri, vishnupuri). Above all of these stands paramdham — the supreme abode, the formless (nirakaari) world of pure divine light.

The seven below earth are the patal lokas, the regions of asuric and tamasic forces. Bapuji has described that there are immense numbers of narak (hell), places of suffering — within these lower realms. Souls weighed down by negative karma find themselves drawn there.

Immediately after leaving the body, the soul finds itself in the subtle world — the lighter dimension that surrounds the earth. Most ordinary souls remain in this layer for a long time, especially those still bound by attachment to home, family, or possessions. Bapuji says the great majority of departed souls do not rise above the layer just adjacent to earth. Those souls cannot even travel one kilometre above earth due their heavy desire and impressions.

To go higher requires more than virtue alone — it requires soul-power. Each higher loka demands more refined vibration. A soul that has cultivated truth, devotion and selfless service rises slowly through bhuvarlok to swarglok. From there, only those souls who recognise that swarglok is itself maya — a more refined illusion — push onward to maharlok and beyond. Many souls do not. They rest in the pleasures of swarglok and eventually fall back to earth when those punya are exhausted.

Above swarglok, in maharlok and janlok rishis and brahmishis who have detached completely from gross attachment continues to live. Higher still, in taplok and brahmapuri, the soul must be made almost entirely of akash tatva no longer pulled by air or fire elements. Vishnulok, also known as vaikunth, comes above. There the soul experiences ati-indriya sukh — supreme bliss beyond the senses. Above vaikunth lies shivpuri, where deep peace — surpasses even bliss. And above shivpuri lies paramdham itself, where peace becomes paramshanti — the supreme peace from which the soul originally came.

Bapuji's careful teaching is this: every soul has a particular destination corresponding to its origin and its development, as mentioned above. A soul created from this solar system can return as far as paramdham of this solar system. A soul created from a galaxy belongs to maha paramdham. A soul created from a universe belongs to even higher abodes (param-maha-paramdham). And the highest souls — the children of the infinite — belong to the supreme abode of the Almighty Authority itself, beyond all multiverses.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Har atma ki manzil alag hai, jaisa karm aur jaisa gyan, vaisa hi gaman.”

“Each soul has its own destination — as is the karma and the knowledge, so is the journey.”

CHAPTER EIGHT

The Two-Hundred Kilometre Boundary

One of Bapuji's most striking teachings is that most departed souls do not rise more than a few hundred kilometres above earth. There is a natural reason for this, and understanding it explains much of what humans witness as ghostly presence.

The earth's gravitational power, Bapuji teaches, holds an influence up to roughly two hundred kilometres above its surface. Within this layer, anything heavy is pulled back toward the ground. The subtle body of an ordinary soul — especially a soul whose final state of mind was negative — is itself heavy. Its three elements, particularly the air element, are weighed down by negative thought. Such a soul, even free of the physical body, cannot push past the earth's gravitational pull.

This is why Bapuji says most ghosts and trapped subtle beings are not living somewhere far away. They are within this two-hundred kilometre band wandering in homes, fields, temples, public places. They can be sensed at certain times. They can be photographed only with subtle means. To physical cameras they remain invisible, because they are made of three elements and the camera registers only five.

Higher and lighter souls are not trapped here. Bapuji teaches that a high-quality soul, having cultivated peace and knowledge, can pass much farther — five hundred kilometres, one thousand, two thousand and beyond. In some places, such as the region known as the Bermuda Triangle, an opening in the upper subtle layer pulls down ships and aircraft when they enter that part of earth's gravitational disturbance. Bapuji has described seeing this directly in his samadhi.

Even higher, beyond the influence of earth's gravity entirely, lie the lokas of the rishis and devatas. To reach these regions a soul must have built genuine soul-power through yog, knowledge, and detachment. The mass of ordinary souls — those who lived without spiritual cultivation — simply cannot rise that far. They turn slowly back to earth and wait for rebirth.

There is a deeper principle hidden here. Soul-power increases the proportion of ether elements in the subtle body. Ether is light and fast. As ether increases, vayu (the air element of negativity, of restless thought) decreases. The lighter the subtle body becomes, the higher it can travel. Liberation, in one sense, is simply the soul becoming so refined that no element holds it back.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma ki sthiti se hi uski oonchaai tay hoti hai — vichaar bhaari to gati ruki.”

“The soul's journey is determined by its state — when thoughts are heavy, all motion stops.”

CHAPTER NINE

The Speed of the Soul

A natural question follows: if the soul travels great distances, how fast does it travel? Bapuji has spoken on this with surprising precision.

He teaches that ordinary light travels at three lakh kilometres per second — the speed of light known to science. But there is a higher speed: the speed of param prakash, supreme divine light. This speed is crore times faster than the speed of light. A soul refined enough to travel in param prakash can cross between galaxies/ Universe in seconds.

Most departed souls have no such speed. They move only as fast as their three-element subtle body allows — barely a few kilometres per hour in some cases, sometimes a few thousand kilometres per second in others. Their travel is slow, weighed down by attachment and karmic bondage. Bapuji compares such a soul to a heavy body that cannot lift itself off the ground.

When a high-quality soul leaves the body with deep yog and complete detachment, it can pass instantly, in fraction of seconds, Bapuji says — into the higher lokas. Not slowly, not gradually. Instantly. The soul is, in its essence, weightless and faster than thought. Only the layers of karmic accumulations , give it apparent weight.

Bapuji also speaks about the speed of sankalp — pure resolve. A pure thought, generated in deep yog, can travel anywhere in creation in a single instant. This is why mantra and remembrance are so powerful when held in soul consciousness. They are not symbolic; they are physical waves of the param tattva, propagating through every layer of the cosmos.

But there is one rule: heavy souls cannot generate light sankalps. A negative mind produces heavy vibrations that reach only the local atmosphere. A pure mind in soul consciousness produces vibrations that reach paramdham itself. The reach of one's prayer depends on the state of one's soul.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Sankalp ki gati atma ki sthiti par nirbhar hai — shuddh atma ka vichaar paramdham tak jaata hai.”

“The speed of resolve depends on the state of the soul — a pure soul's thought reaches all the way to paramdham.”

CHAPTER TEN

The Causal Body

Inside the subtle body lies the causal body — the karan sharir — which Bapuji describes as the deepest covering of the soul, made of pure akash tatva. This is where every karmic impression is held. It is, in his words, like a supercomputer that automatically records everything the soul does, thinks, feels, and witnesses, across not one life but every life.

Bapuji often emphasises that no thought, no word, no action escapes recording. Even what is done in absolute privacy is recorded. The recording happens first in the causal body of the doer; from there it spreads outward into the akash tatva of the surrounding atmosphere; from there it travels upward through the higher lokas; ultimately it reaches paramdham. Every act is witnessed.

This is the heart of what the ancients called the akashic record — the cosmic ledger in the ether. Bapuji teaches that this record is not stored in some distant office in the sky; it is recorded simultaneously in countless layers, in the air around the doer, in the soil beneath, in the surrounding stones — anywhere akash tatva -ether exists, the recording is laid down. He has said that even fifty metres of soil beneath a place of long tapasya holds the imprints of that tapasya for thousands of years.

When a person performs an action, the consequences of that action begin almost immediately. Bapuji teaches that when one does wrong, the mind itself instantly registers it — the heart grows heavy, the conscience darkens. This is the immediate fruit. The delayed fruit comes later, as the recording in the causal body shapes future circumstance.

When the soul departs the body, it carries this causal body with it. Every accumulated karma is loaded into the soul's onward journey. This determines where the soul can travel, what it can experience, and into what kind of body it will eventually take birth.

There is a beautiful corollary. If the causal body is the cause of bondage, it is also the place where liberation occurs. When the soul receives true knowledge and connects to the supreme through yog, the param prakash flows down into the soul, and the soul's power begins to charge the causal body. As it charges, old recordings begin to dissolve. Karmas that would have taken many lives to exhaust can be dissolved within years. This is why Bapuji says yog is the fastest path — not because it is mystical, but because it changes the substance of the causal body itself.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Karan sharir mein anek janmon ka hisaab likha hai; gyan aur yog se yeh saaf hota hai.”

“The causal body holds the account of many lives; only knowledge and yog can clear it.”

CHAPTER ELEVEN

The Akashic Record

Bapuji teaches that thought is not private. Every sankalp generated in the mind goes immediately into the surrounding atmosphere. From there it travels outward in concentric layers — first to the local environment, then to the nearer lokas, then upward through bhuvarelok, swarglok, maharelok, janlok, taplok, brahmapuri, vishnupuri, shivpuri — all the way to paramdham, and from there to maha paramdham, param maha paramdham, and beyond.

Every layer of the cosmos is in constant contact with every other through this medium. Ether element is the messenger. A thought of love sent in the right state of consciousness reaches the supreme. So does a thought of hatred or indifference. Nothing is hidden or forgotten.

This is the deeper meaning of the saying that the universe is listening. Bapuji teaches that the universe is not just listening, it is recording, transmitting and responding. The vibrations a person sends out shape the vibrations they receive back. A negative mind seeds a negative atmosphere; a pure mind seeds a pure atmosphere. Each thought is a note dropped into the cosmic field.

There is a profound implication for spiritual practice. When a spiritual seeker performs deep meditative discipline in a particular place a forest, a mountain, a cave ,the ether element (akash tatava) of that place fills with param tattva. Even centuries later, anyone who sits there and is sensitive enough can feel the residue. Bapuji has described this from his own experience. Certain spots on earth carry the recorded vibration of sages who sat there long ago.

Conversely, places of long-standing negativity carry their own residue. Houses where great suffering has occurred, sites of violence, places where many souls were trapped — these carry the recordings as well, and they affect every person who enters.

The deepest application: every individual is constantly broadcasting what they are. The atmosphere of one's home, of one's relationships, of one's body all of these reflect the broadcast. To change one's environment, one must change one's broadcast. And the broadcast can only be changed by changing the soul itself, through knowledge and yog.

thought itself colours the whole of life.”

CHAPTER TWELVE

The Law of Karma After Death

Karma does not stop at death. Bapuji teaches that this is one of the most important truths to grasp. The soul that leaves the body still carries the full karmic account, written in the causal body, and that account continues to operate in the next phase of its existence.

Even in the subtle world, the soul continues to act. It thinks, it desires, it interacts with other subtle beings, sometimes it influences events on earth, sometimes it works through the bodies of the living. Each of these actions is recorded. Karma after death is not as decisive as karma in human form — only the human birth allows full free will and the possibility of liberation — but it is real.

This is why Bapuji emphasises the rare value of human birth. In other yonis the soul cannot reason, cannot choose, cannot generate the kind of pure resolve that breaks karmic bondage. In ghost or animal yonis, the soul can only react to its instincts. In deva yonis, the soul mostly enjoys past punya without earning new freedom. Only in human form is real spiritual progress possible.

Bapuji explains that the soul accumulates three kinds of karma: prarabdh (the karmas already maturing in this life), sanchit (the storehouse of past unmaturing karmas), and kriyaman (the new karmas being created now). Most people do not see how all three operate. They only see the immediate consequences of present action. But sanchit karmas can sit dormant for hundreds of births before fruiting. Bapuji has said that in some cases sanchit karmas remain unredeemed for many lifetimes.

The way out is twofold: first, stop creating new negative karma; second, dissolve old karma through the power of yog and knowledge. Bapuji teaches that yog with the Almighty Authority is the highest karma-burner. The soul that connects with that supreme source receives param prakash, and that light burns away karmic recordings the way the sun dries up water.

Until full liberation, the soul moves through births and deaths shaped by its own karmic momentum. There is no external judge sitting somewhere assigning penalties. Bapuji says the system is automatic now — the karmic supercomputer works on its own. The soul writes its own destiny, life by life, thought by thought.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Why Souls Return Again and Again

Why do souls return? Why does the cycle of birth and death continue, even for those who claim to want liberation? Bapuji's answer is direct: souls return because they have not actually learned to let go. The cycle continues as long as the soul remains attached, however subtly.

Even souls that rise as high as brahmapuri (sat lok) eventually return. Bapuji explains why. Brahmapuri is still within the gravitational reach of the sun of this solar system. From there, when the soul looks downward, it can see its old loved ones, old projects, old creations. Moh - lingering attachment, stirs. The moment that attachment becomes strong enough, the soul is pulled back into the cycle & re-enters birth.

Even sages who have done great penance for thousands of years can fall this way. Their austerity took them up; their un-renounced desire pulled them back down. This is the great trap, Bapuji teaches: the soul reaches a high station but does not let go of identity, and so it returns to the work of identity — namely, taking another body.

Most ordinary souls never reach such heights of Brahmapuri. They return much sooner, because their attachment was much grosser. A soul attached to its house returns to a similar house. A soul attached to a relationship is reborn into similar relationships. A soul that loved wealth is born into circumstances dominated by money. A soul that lived in fear is born into fear-filled situations. The pattern of attachment becomes the pattern of the next life.

Bapuji also gives precise teaching about how rebirth itself works mechanically. When the soul is ready to take a new body, it enters the womb as a single point of consciousness, a sookshm seed. From that point, the body slowly forms around it. By the fifth month of pregnancy the soul becomes partially conscious within the developing body. By the sixth or seventh month it is awake to its situation, often remembering past karmic patterns, sometimes feeling regret over earlier-life sins. As birth approaches, however, this awareness fades. The body's coverings close over the soul's memory, and the newborn enters life mostly forgetting what it knew. This forgetting, Bapuji says, is itself a function of the karmic system; if every soul remembered everything, the burden would be unbearable.

There is a subtle teaching about gender in rebirth. Bapuji says ninety-nine percent of souls take birth in the gender that matched their final orientation in the previous life — a soul carrying purush bhav (male identity) generally takes male body, a soul carrying stree bhav (female identity) generally takes female body. The hormones of the body that develops in the womb are themselves shaped by the soul's emotions. In rare cases — what modern medicine notices as gender dysphoria — a soul that was strongly oriented one way in past life takes a body of the other gender, or has another soul of the opposite orientation enter early in childhood and gradually shift the inner experience. This is not pathology in Bapuji's seeing; it is the mechanics of subtle inner orientation interacting with biological development.

In ancient times, Bapuji teaches, there was a Bhagya Devi who would inscribe the destiny of each newborn on the seventh day after birth, drawing on the soul's accumulated karmic record. That formal system has since become automatic; the soul's own causal body now produces the destiny without any external scribe. But the principle is the same: what unfolds is what was already written within.

Bapuji teaches that the only permanent escape is to dissolve identity itself, while still living, in connection with the supreme. The soul that becomes nirakar (formless), identity less, while still in the body, has nothing to be reborn as, because there is no individual mind left clinging to a future. Such a soul, when it leaves the body, can ascend without the gravitational pull of self.

This is the highest meaning of Krishna's words in the shri Bhagawad Geeta: "Sarva dharman parityajya mam ekam sharanam vraja" — "Abandon all dharmas, and take refuge in Me alone." The Lord of the Geeta, Bapuji teaches, was the Almighty Authority speaking through Krishna. The instruction is precise: let go of every identity, every role, every attachment. Surrender the entire constructed self into the supreme. Then the soul is free to return home.

PART THREE

Departed Souls and the World Around Earth

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Attachment and the Soul's Fall

Bapuji teaches that attachment is the single greatest force keeping the soul tied to earth. He calls it Moh is different from love. Love can be pure, free, expansive. Moh is grasping. Moh is the inability to let go. And it is Moh that drags the soul, again and again, back into bodies it has already worn out.

When a soul leaves the body with strong attachments still alive in the mind, it cannot rise. It hovers near the home. It hovers near the loved ones it could not release. It hovers near the property, the business, the relationships it could not surrender. Bapuji says many souls remain in their old houses for years — sometimes for generations — because no one ever taught them to leave.

Even rich, accomplished souls fall this way. Bapuji has often spoken of those who built great mansions and amassed wealth: when the body falls, the soul returns to that mansion expecting to find its place there, and instead finds the mansion locked against it, the family afraid of its presence, perhaps even hiring tantriks (practises by using voodoo) to drive it out. The very people the soul lived for now treat it as an unwanted ghost.

There is a deeper teaching here. The soul accumulates Moh because it has identified with bodies, relationships, and possessions for so many lifetimes that the identification feels real. Bapuji says the soul truly believes that body, family, house etc is his/her. Releasing this belief takes either great wisdom or great suffering. Most souls are released only by suffering, when the karmic exhaustion forces them out of the cycle.

The wise way is to release while alive. Bapuji teaches detachment as the constant inner practice — to do every action with full presence and care, but without grasping. To love deeply without binding. To work hard without identifying with the result. To live in family life while remembering that the family is itself temporary. This kind of inner detachment, while still in the body, is what allows the soul to leave easily when its time comes.

Without this inner work, even the most spiritual aspirant can find themselves trapped at death. The mind clings to whatever it loved most, and the soul follows the mind.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

Trapped Souls and Haunted Places

Some places carry the imprint of trapped souls. Old palaces, abandoned mansions, ancient battlefields, sites of violent death — Bapuji teaches that such places are often inhabited by souls who could not move on. They remain because some attachment, some unfinished thought, some moment of trauma fixed them there.

He has spoken of the great mansions in London turned into hotels, where reports of haunting persist. The same souls who ruled those houses centuries ago have not been able to leave. Their mind held the place; the place became their bondage. Now they wander rooms they once owned, watched by living guests who sense them but cannot see them.

On a smaller scale, every village in India has stories of haunted homes, certain trees, certain wells, certain old buildings. Bapuji speaks of his own childhood — he saw such souls clearly. In his village, he and others would deliberately go where bhuts were known to gather. He talked with them. He helped them when he could. "Hum to bhutoñ se baat karte the," he says — "we used to talk with the ghosts."

Bapuji has also spoken of an episode from his own family. His mother was once taken by a "jogni devi" — a particular kind of subtle female being. For three days, she was in deep sleep like state and her body was preserved at home; but inwardly her soul had been led on a journey through the subtle worlds. When she returned, she described what she had seen — places, beings, layers — that no one in the village could have taught her. The experience confirmed for the young Bapuji what he was already perceiving with his own divya drishti: that the subtle world is real, populated, and contiguous with this one. From these early experiences he developed an unusually direct ability to see and interact with souls in those layers.

Why does this happen? Bapuji explains that the soul whose last final thought ---matti, was fixed on a place cannot leave that place easily. A soul that died in fear in a particular room often remains in that room. A soul that died in anger in a particular field often remains in that field. The mind at death set the location; the soul cannot rise above it without help.

What helps such souls? Bapuji teaches that two things help. First, knowledge. If anyone, living or dead, plays the discourse of the supreme truth in or near such a place, the trapped souls hear and slowly begin to understand. They realise they are souls, not bodies; that they need not stay; that there is somewhere else to go. Second, vibrations of param shanti. When pure vibrations of supreme peace fill a place, trapped souls find relief and begin to move on.

What does not help: attempts to drive them out by force, black magics, family members refusing to remember them or shutting them out. These actions cause more suffering. The soul is already in a difficult condition; harsh treatment only deepens its distress. Bapuji's path is always one of giving knowledge and giving peace — never of fighting the trapped soul.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

Possession — Why Negative Souls Enter Bodies

Bapuji speaks plainly about possession. Yes, he says, it happens. Bodies are not always inhabited only by the soul born into them. Other souls can enter, especially when the body is weak, the mind unsettled, or the karmic doors open.

Why do they enter? In most cases, because they want something they had in human form and now cannot have on their own. A soul that loved alcohol may enter a drinker. A soul that loved certain foods may enter someone eating those foods. A soul filled with hatred or revenge may enter to act through another's body. The desires the soul had at death now have no outlet of their own — so it borrows a body.

Bapuji has shared an example from his own observation. A soul that had been a non-vegetarian in when had body, entered in a Brahmin person's body who was vegetarian in life and demanded meat. The family refused at first; the possession persisted. Eventually they had to feed the meat through the possessed body, and the entering soul ate so much that it nearly destroyed the host's body. The desires of the dead drove the actions of the living.

Many strange behaviours have this hidden cause. Bapuji speaks of cases where a man suddenly seems to develop a different personality, where someone who had no taste for alcohol suddenly cannot stop drinking, where rage erupts in places where one's own karmic pattern does not explain it. Often the cause is not psychological alone — there is a subtle entry happening.

There is a startling extension of this teaching. Bapuji has explained that around certain places — old liquor dens, certain trees where alcohol or cigarettes are offered, gathering spots known to the locals — large groups of subtle souls assemble. When one living person enters such a place and begins to drink, sometimes a hundred such subtle souls enter that one body simultaneously, all sharing in the experience through the drinker. This is why heavy addiction can feel uncontrollable. The drinker is no longer drinking alone. The group of attached subtle beings has its own hunger, and the body cannot stop until they are temporarily satisfied.

Particularly disturbing are cases of crime where a possessing soul seems to use the body to enact its own old patterns. Bapuji has spoken of acts of violence committed by people who had no prior tendency to violence — including cases where an aged man under possession commits acts unthinkable in his ordinary state. The host's own causal record alone does not explain the act; one or several negative souls have taken control through karmic openings.

Bapuji also corrects an important misunderstanding here. In some traditions it is taught that the supreme-Shiva / deity — enters the body of a chosen medium to deliver teachings. Bapuji teaches firmly: Shiva NEVER enters any body. The supreme works only through param prakash and through the soul's own connection. Any subtle being that enters a body claiming to be Shiva / deity is in fact a subtle soul of the lower layers, sometimes powerful, sometimes simply manipulative. The pure supreme remains in paramdham; the seeker who wishes connection must rise inwardly, not wait for divinity to descend through another's body.

What protection exists? Bapuji teaches that the only real protection is the soul's own light. A soul filled with param prakash, in regular yog with the supreme, generates a vibration that negative entities cannot easily approach. Living in pure surroundings, eating pure food, keeping pure company, and most of all keeping the mind in remembrance — these together create a field that does not invite intrusion. Mantras and rituals against possession are mostly weak now, Bapuji says, because the devatas they invoke have themselves become humans. Only direct connection with the Almighty Authority offers reliable protection in this age.

If possession does occur, Bapuji's prescription is again knowledge and peace. The possessing soul is suffering and needs guidance. Treat it harshly and it resists; teach it patiently and it eventually wishes to move on.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

Communication With the Dead — Mediums and Psychics

Across cultures, certain people claim to communicate with the dead. Mediums, psychics, ojhas, oracles — they all claim a connection. Bapuji teaches that the phenomenon is real, but the mechanism is rarely understood.

What actually happens? When a medium calls upon a particular departed soul, that soul — if it is still in the lower subtle layers near earth — can hear and may respond. The medium's mind, often trained to slip into a passive state, becomes a partial channel. Information flows from the subtle world through the medium to the listener. Sometimes the information is accurate. Sometimes it is mixed, because the souls in the lower subtle world often deceive, take other identities, and play. Bapuji says ghosts lie much more than living humans, because in their state of suffering they have nothing to lose.

Mediums can only reach souls within a certain range. Typically those souls within a few hundred kilometre within earth. Souls who have ascended past swarglok, maharlok or higher, cannot be summoned. They have moved beyond the medium's range entirely. Those who have reached paramdham cannot be reached at all by such methods.

Bapuji has spoken of the Indian tradition of ojhas — village exorcists who specialise in summoning souls into a host body. They capture few ghosts, try controlling them to do their work. Those ghosts then enter the chosen person and speak. This is real, Bapuji says. He has witnessed it many times. But it is also full of confusion, because the ojha himself cannot always control what enters.

Modern equivalents include EVP recordings, where investigators capture voices on audio devices. Bapuji says voices can indeed be picked up because subtle souls do speak, particularly in places of trapped souls and certain machines, especially when their frequencies happen to align with subtle layers, can record what physical hearing cannot.

Other forms of psychic reading, face reading, mind reading, telling someone's dead relative's wishes, work through subtle world helpers. The medium's helpers travel to the relative's subtle body, read its records, and return to inform the medium. Different religions have different patterns. All get assistance from subtle world from respective category ghost.

Bapuji's caution is steady: avoid these practices when possible. Even when accurate, they keep the mind tied to the lower subtle layers. The seeker becomes dependent on intermediaries instead of going directly to the supreme. And often the information received increases attachment instead of dissolving it.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Ghosts And Malevolent Beings

Bapuji teaches that ghosts (pret) yoni — is one among the eighty-four lakh species of life. It is not a permanent destination. It is a station in the soul's wandering, sometimes lasting a thousand years or more before another human birth becomes possible.

Who becomes a ghost? Bapuji's answer is precise: those whose final/last thought at death was filled with strong negative emotion — jealousy, resentment, revenge, unsatisfied desire. Such a soul is so heavy with negative energy that it cannot rise. Its subtle body is filled with darkness. Bapuji has described the appearance of such souls when seen in samadhi: their auras are black, like shadows, because there is no light inside them. Souls of higher quality appear white or luminous, because their inner light shines through.

Pret yoni includes many subdivisions. Ghosts wander widely. Malevolent Spirits (Pishachas) are more vicious. There are also categories Bapuji describes as 'shaitan' — concentrated negative beings who in some places form what he calls a saamrajya, a kingdom, in the layer between five hundred and a thousand kilometres above earth. These are the most dangerous, capable of strong influence on the living.

Where do ghost souls live? In the gross sense, they remain in the lower subtle layer near earth — in homes, temples, banyan trees, peepul trees, abandoned places, sometimes in the seas. They are everywhere. The number of spirits on earth, Bapuji says, is many times the number of living humans. Where eight hundred crore humans walk, the surrounding subtle space holds far more subtle souls.

What do they want? Different things — usually the satisfaction of unfulfilled desire. They want food, drink, attention, revenge. Some want simply to be acknowledged. Bapuji has described how, when villagers offer liquor or cigarettes at certain trees believing it grants wishes, a small group of pret souls there are momentarily satisfied — but they have no real power to grant anything in return. They are themselves suffering and powerless.

Why does Ghost yoni last so long? Because the soul has no easy way out. It cannot generate the kind of pure resolve needed to ascend. It cannot meditate. It cannot purify itself. It can only wait for the right karmic opening to take human birth again — and that takes many centuries. This is why human birth is rare and precious. Only in human form does free will return, and with it the chance to break the entire cycle.

Bapuji's compassion extends fully to such souls. He teaches that they are not evil in the religious sense; they are simply souls in profound distress. Speaking the supreme knowledge in their hearing, sending them vibrations of param shanti, treating them with respect rather than fear — these acts can begin their slow ascent.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Bhoot bhi atmaayein hain — unhe gyan aur shanti chahiye, dushmani nahi.”

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Cremation, Burial and the Wisdom of Death Rites

Different cultures handle the body of the dead in very different ways. Bapuji teaches that each tradition has its own logic, and each carries its own consequence for the departing soul.

Hindus cremate. The body is burned, the bones are sometimes immersed in the Ganga or another sacred river, and within hours nothing of the physical form remains. Bapuji explains the deep wisdom of this practice. As long as the body still exists, the soul has a strong tendency to return to it — to hover around it, to try to re-enter it, to remain attached to it. By burning the body completely, the family removes the soul's anchor. The bones in Ganga ensure that even the most subtle attachment to the physical remains is dissolved in flowing sacred water. The soul is freed to move on.

Christians and Muslims bury. The body is preserved as much as possible, in the belief that on the day of resurrection (kayamat ka din) — the body will be raised again from the grave. Bapuji explains this from the spiritual side: in such traditions, the soul often hovers near the grave for years, even centuries, waiting for the promised return. This anchoring of the soul to a specific physical site can prolong its earthly attachment.

Some tribal communities, such as the Toraja of Indonesia, keep the dead body in the home for as long as a year before final burial. Each day they speak to the body, offer it food, treat it as a living member of the family. Bapuji says this practice keeps the soul of the dead bound to the home for that entire year, unable to leave. Some kept bodies in pots in the mountains. Others sealed them in pyramids and Bapuji explained that pyramids were not mere tombs but elaborate energy systems designed to channel the soul, often through specific stars, back to the home of its origin.

Modern science has invented its own approaches. Bapuji has spoken of cryogenic preservation in places like Russia, where bodies of fifty-nine countries' citizens have been frozen in the hope that future technology will revive them. He says clearly: this cannot work. The soul has already departed. The body is a discarded vehicle. Even if the cells are kept preserved, no soul will return to a body it has left, because the body's organic systems, once interrupted, cannot host the same identity again.

Bapuji's recommendation, drawing from sanatan teaching, is the swift release of the body, burn it, let the soul not have a place to come back to. Then send the soul forward with knowledge & prayer, instead of binding it to the past. Body's has finished its journey. The soul is the traveller who must continue.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Shareer to ek vaahan tha; usse mukt karna hi atma ki sahaayata hai.”

“The body was only a vehicle; releasing it is the truest help to the departing soul.”

CHAPTER TWENTY

The Thirteen-Day Period and Garuda Puran

In many Hindu families, the days immediately following death are filled with specific rituals — the Garuda Puran is read aloud, food is offered to Brahmins, prayers are recited, ancestors are remembered. Bapuji speaks about all of this with both respect for the original wisdom and clear-eyed assessment of what still works today.

The traditional understanding is that for roughly thirteen days the soul remains close to the body and home, witnessing the rites being performed, hearing what is said, drawing some sustenance from the prayers. In Bapuji's confirms that yes, the soul is still nearby for these days. It is watching. Yes, it is affected by what happens.

The Garuda Puran, however, Bapuji describes as having become outdated. Originally it was a profound teaching about the soul's journey — what awaits in hell-heaven, where suffering-bliss come from what kind of life. In its time it was a powerful warning and a useful guide. Today, Bapuji says, simply listening to the Garuda Puran often makes souls more sad rather than helping it. The soul is already grieving hearing detailed accounts of suffering merely deepens that grief.

What helps, instead, is true knowledge of the soul. Play the supreme teaching in the home during these days. Let the soul of the departed hear that it is not the body, that it is eternal, that there is a way upward. Speak directly to the soul: 'Move on. Go to the higher lokas. Do not remain. Remember the Almighty Authority.' Such direct guidance, given in love, helps the soul orient itself.

The traditional pind dan and tarpan ceremonies once worked because the Brahmins performing them had genuine spiritual power. The vibrations they generated reached the soul and supported its journey. Bapuji says today most such ceremonies have lost that power, because most performers themselves have not done the inner work. The form remains; the substance is often gone. Where the performers are still genuine, the ceremonies still help.

Even more important than ritual, Bapuji says, is the family's own behaviour. Excessive crying causes the departed soul direct pain. Hearing loved ones grieve, the soul too becomes distressed and is pulled back to the home. Grieve briefly, sincerely, and then turn the mind to wishing the soul well — to praying for its onward movement. This is the highest service the family can offer. And after the days are done, Bapuji counsels: do not keep photographs of the departed displayed for years, do not garland them daily, do not call to them again and again. All these acts hold the soul near the home. Let them go.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mritak ko vidaayi do — gyan suno, prarthna karo, fir use jaane do.”

“Give the departed a true farewell — share knowledge, pray, and then let them go.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

Drugs, Anaesthesia and Out-of-Body Experiences

Bapuji has spoken about a phenomenon many people have wondered about: how certain substances can cause the human consciousness to leave the body temporarily, travel to subtle regions, and return with vivid memories.

The mechanism, he explains, is straightforward when seen from inside. Strong anaesthetic drugs given before surgery contain compounds the subtle body cannot process. They are too heavy for it. As a result, when these drugs flood the system, the subtle body partially separates from the physical body. About seventy-five percent of the subtle body steps out, while around twenty-five percent remains inside to keep the physical alive. During the four or five hours of operation, this is what makes the patient feel nothing.

In near-death cases, when a heart stops for a few minutes, the same separation occurs more dramatically. The subtle body leaves almost entirely. People who later report watching their own surgery from above the operating table, or seeing tunnels of light, or meeting deceased relatives, are describing what the temporarily liberated subtle body actually witnessed. Bapuji says, are mostly genuine.

Certain plant medicines used in shamanic traditions — Bapuji refers to ayahuasca and similar substances — work in a similar way. They cause the soul, with its causal body, to slip past the boundary of the gross body. The user feels themselves entering vast inner spaces, meeting beings, traversing dimensions. What they are actually experiencing is the causal body's own perception, freed temporarily from the grip of the physical.

Bapuji has commented on bhang (a drink made with cannabis), the cannabis traditionally associated with the divine drink as part of celebration in Mahashivaratri. The original purpose, he explains, was that Shankar — as the manifestation of Shiva for this brahmand — needed to maintain conscious connection with the fourteen lokas, with Brahma, Vishnu, the adi shaktis. Bhang served as one mechanism for that connection. The wider human attempts to use the same substance have not produced the same result, Bapuji says. Without the inner foundation, bhang only induces dullness or confusion.

The deeper teaching: external substances may give a glimpse, but they do not give the journey. The soul that travels through drugs returns when the drug wears off. The soul that travels through yog earns what it sees, integrates it, eventually does not need to return. The yogic doorway is real. Bapuji always points the seeker back to direct connection with the supreme, where no substance is needed & no return is forced.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Drugs may give a glimpse, but only yog gives the actual journey.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

Past-Life Memory — The Five-Thousand-Year Limit

Past-life regression has become popular in recent years. People claim to remember being warriors, queens, peasants, sages from many centuries ago. Bapuji explains the limits of what is genuinely possible and what is being mistaken for memory.

He teaches that subtle world helpers can take a willing person back through a chain of past births, allowing memories to surface. This is real. But there is a definite limit. Bapuji says, maximum reliable reach is approximately two to three thousand years, at the most may be five thousand years. Cases where the regressed person seems to remember being present at the Mahabharat war, for instance, are at the edge of what is possible. Beyond that, the recordings become too distant for the subtle helpers to retrieve clearly.

Why this limit? Bapuji likens the soul's memory store to a computer with limited active recall. The most recent ten or fifteen lives are most accessible. Earlier lives are stored deeper, and only powerful, refined subtle helpers can reach into them. A guide that brings a soul back five thousand years has done excellent work; one that claims to take it back a hundred thousand years is most likely fabricating.

There is also a different mechanism Bapuji describes. Sometimes a person remembers events from a much earlier era because, in fact, they were there — the soul itself had taken birth at that time. Some souls who were alive five thousand years ago during Krishna or Ram, do still exist and have continued through many bodies into the present. When such a soul is brought back to that period, the memories are first-hand. But this is rare.

Most past-life claims, Bapuji says, are mixed with imagination, with subtle world fabrication, with material drawn from the akashic record around the regression site. Genuine memory and elaborate fiction look similar to the untrained mind. The seeker must be careful.

More importantly: knowing the past lives in detail does not, by itself, free the soul. Bapuji teaches that the only real freedom comes from knowledge of who one is now, in this life, and through that knowledge, connection with the supreme. The story of past lives is interesting but not necessary. The release of attachment in the present is everything.

He has shared, however, that for one purpose past-life knowledge is useful: when a soul becomes aware of patterns it has carried for many births & recognises that those patterns are what continue to bind it. Such recognition can motivate deeper letting-go. But the knowing must serve liberation, not become another decoration of the ego.

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

Suicide and Self-Departure — A Compassionate Truth

This chapter is offered with care, because the subject is delicate. Bapuji speaks about self-inflicted death — atmaghaat — with deep compassion for the suffering that drives a person there, and with equal seriousness about why the sanatan tradition calls it Big Sin

Bapuji's first concern is always the human being still alive. He says that no one acts against their own life lightly. People are pushed to that edge by depression, by economic pressure, by social humiliation, by inner turmoil that has been building for years. He acknowledges all of these as real. He has known cases personally, including from his own years of professional work, where he saw kind, capable people pushed by relentless circumstances to the brink. His compassion for them is unshaken.

But Bapuji also speaks the deeper truth: the soul's suffering does not end with the body. The soul that leaves the body in despair carries that despair with it. Whatever weight of unresolved emotion was present in the final moment is now unfiltered, undiluted, with no body to muffle it. Bapuji describes how such souls often see only thick darkness all around them after departure. The relief they sought is not waiting on the other side.

Many such souls then try to re-enter the body. The body has been damaged or cremated. They cannot return. They may stay around the home, around family, near the place of departure. Other negative subtle souls may gather around them. The very pain they tried to escape has now grown larger, and they have no easy way out.

Bapuji teaches that subtle world influences sometimes play a role even in the original act. Negative souls that had attached themselves to a person — particularly to those in positions of celebrity, power, or addiction — can push the person toward self-harm by relentless mental pressure. He has spoken sadly of cases of well-known figures whose paranormal investigations or public lives drew dense subtle attachments, and who eventually fell. The mind is influenced more than people realise.

What is the compassionate path? For anyone in deep distress now, Bapuji's message is unwavering: please do not give up. Reach out to someone you trust. Reach out to professional help. The despair is real, but it is also temporary, and it lies. Your life has value beyond what your present pain can show you.

He also reminds families: do not stigmatise such departures. Pray for the soul. Send vibrations of paramshanti. Share atmagyan -- Soul knowledge. The soul may need many years of support before it can rise. And he reminds society: build environments where people in distress can speak honestly, where they are not isolated, where pure company and true knowledge are available. Many souls reach the edge because they had nowhere to turn. A culture of compassion and truth can prevent that.

The deepest message is this: the soul is eternal. It cannot escape itself by leaving the body. The escape it seeks is only available through inner transformation — through knowledge, through yog, through the realisation that what causes the suffering is not the situation but the identification with the situation. That door is always open, even in the worst circumstances. As long as one breath remains, the door is open.

PART FOUR

The Cosmic Structure of the Soul's Journey

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

Near-Death Experiences

Bapuji speaks about near-death experiences with great clarity. Many of them are real. They are partial glimpses of the soul's actual journey, briefly granted to a soul whose body has not yet fully released it.

When a person's heart stops or their physical functions are severely interrupted — even for five minutes — the subtle body partially separates. About seventy-five percent leaves; around twenty-five percent remains, holding the body in its present form. During this brief separation, the conscious soul can witness things ordinary perception cannot reach. They may see their own body from above, observe the doctors working, watch family members in the corridor, sometimes travel some distance away.

Some souls in this state proceed slightly higher — into the subtle layer above earth. They may meet relatives who have died before. Bapuji explains that yes, such reunions can be authentic, when the relatives' souls happen to still be in the lower subtle world. The soul recognises them in a flash, not because of physical features, but because of subtle identity.

Some report seeing tunnels, lights, presences, scenes of overwhelming peace. Bapuji teaches these glimpses are also real for some souls, especially those with stronger inner cultivation. They are not seeing the highest realms. They are seeing the entry into the subtle world, sometimes with intimations of higher light.

Why do they come back? Bapuji's answer: because the karmic account of this life was not yet complete. The body had not exhausted its purpose. Subtle world helpers, reading the causal body, recognise this and gently send the soul back. The person returns with vivid memory of what they saw, often transformed by it.

The transformation is the most important fruit. Many people who experience near-death events live very differently afterward. The fear of death dissolves. Material concerns shrink. Compassion grows. Bapuji says these are signs of the soul having received a teaching it could not refuse — direct experience of its own continuity. From that point, the rest of life is a preparation for the journey one already knows is real.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

Origin Of Death

Bapuji's teaching of cosmic history holds a remarkable truth: death itself was not always part of creation. There was a time when death did not exist on earth. There was a time when souls came and left bodies at will, by their own resolve, without any external force compelling them.

He explains the early structure. When this brahmand was first formed, Shiva nirakar gave rise to Shiva Akari; Shiva and Shakti together gave rise to Vishnu; from Vishnu's navel came Brahma; from Brahma's resolve emerged the saptarshis, the seven great rishis; and from them emerged the first creations — the param purushas, the original beings whose bodies were made entirely of param tattva, whose souls shone with param prakash. These earliest souls were self-luminous. Their bodies were made of supreme fire. They moved freely between lokas. There was no death because there was no need for it.

Over the immense passage of time — through many billions of years of Brahma's first parardh — these original souls slowly descended. The supreme elements gradually thinned. Three-element bodies became dominant. The lokas of the devatas formed. And eventually, descending further, two-element coverings, the gross body of water and earth, began to appear. The soul became progressively more covered. At first, even the early human-form souls retained the option of leaving the body at will. They could decide their time, drop the body, and ascend.

But as more souls came to inhabit gross bodies, the moh of attachment began to dominate. Souls became unwilling to leave even when it was their time. The body grew old, sick, broken — yet the soul refused to depart. The earth began to grow heavy with too many bodies, too much accumulated negativity, too many souls clinging to forms that should have been released.

It was at this point, Bapuji teaches, that Brahma created death. Yamraj was established as the master of mrityu lok. Yamdoots were dispatched to retrieve the souls of those who would not leave on their own. Chitrugupta was set to keep the karmic ledger. Hell was constructed below for souls weighed by sin; swarg above for souls of merit. The whole apparatus of obligatory death emerged because the natural exit had broken down.

Bapuji explains a precise period. Through the early ages of this brahmand — particularly throughout satyug — death did not visit. Mrityu came in only as the satyug declined and treta began. Yamraj's vacation, Bapuji says with a touch of humour, is during satyug; he is not needed then. He becomes active as kalyug approaches.

Today, Bapuji teaches, even Yamraj's old system has changed. The role of Chitragupta, the formal ledger, the dispatching of yamdoots — all of these have grown automatic now. The soul's own causal body holds the complete record. The system runs without intermediaries. Each soul effectively writes, reads, and processes its own departure based on the karmic state it has accumulated.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mrityu pehle nahi thi; jab moh badha tab uska sarjan hua.”

“Death did not exist at first; it was created when attachment grew too heavy.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

Different Categories of Souls

Bapuji teaches that souls are not uniform. They come in many categories, each with its own nature, capacity, origin, and destiny. Understanding these categories opens up the deeper structure of the cosmos.

At the most basic level, souls differ by the three gunas namely sattva, rajas, and tamas. A satopradhan soul is filled with light, peace, clarity and natural inclination toward truth. A rajopradhan soul is full of activity, ambition, restless desire. A tamopradhan soul is heavy, dull, drawn toward base patterns of behaviour. Most ordinary humans now are tamopradhan, Bapuji says. The descent of yug-cycles has taken the average soul deep into tamasic colour.

At another level, souls differ by power. Some have soul-power equal to one kala of light, some ten Kala, some a hundred, some a thousand, some a lakh, some a crore. Bapuji describes the spectrum literally, soul-power is real, measurable in spiritual terms and shapes everything about the soul's trajectory.

At yet another level, souls differ by origin. Bapuji's deeper teaching distinguishes: First, souls created from this Solar System. Their natural ceiling is the paramdham of this Solar System They can with effort reach as far as the supreme abode of Shiva.

Second, souls who originally came from a galaxy. Their origin is maha paramdham, the abode of Mahashiva at the centre of the galaxy. They can reach as far as Mahashiva with austerity. Third, souls who came from a universe. Their natural home is param maha paramdham, the abode of Param Mahashiva. They can reach that supreme abode with effort.

Fourth, souls who came from great universes, ever vaster realms beyond a single universe. They have higher capacities still. Fifth, souls of the multiverse. These are very rare on earth and belong to the abode of the Almighty Authority itself.

Sixth and highest, the children of the infinite — 108, 16,000, 9 lakh — descended directly by the Almighty Authority for specific cosmic work. Bapuji teaches that these souls are the rarest of all and are taking birth on earth right now for the great transformation of the entire multiverse.

The category of a soul reveals itself, Bapuji says, by what knowledge resonates with it. A soul whose origin is in this Solar-System will be drawn to teachings of this Solar System. A soul of behad origin will be restless until it finds the highest teaching of all — behad gyan. The pull of knowledge is the soul's homing signal.

“Atma ki pehchan uska gyan hai — jo gyan sune wahi uski katagori bataata hai.”

“A soul is recognised by the knowledge it accepts — what it absorbs reveals its category.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

The Evolution and Degradation of Souls

Bapuji teaches that souls do not stay at one level forever. They rise and fall through long ages, gaining and losing power, ascending and descending through many forms.

The pattern across this Creation has been one of long descent. The original souls created here were satopradhan, full of param prakash, moving freely between worlds. Innumerable births and deaths diluted this purity. As souls indulged in maya, attached to bodies, accumulated karmas, they fell from satopradhan to Rajopradhan ,from Rajopradhan to Tamopradhan. Their power decreased. Their bodies grew denser.

Bapuji says even thirty-three crore devatas, the heads of the various forces of nature, descended this way. Indra, the king of all devatas, lost his position through the wrong actions. Bapuji has spoken from Shastras that Indra's misdeeds drew on him a curse, and the soul that had once ruled the devatas fell to such a degraded state that, in time, it took birth as the lowest creature in hell (Narak). The fall of the king of devas to a worm in hell, this is the depth of degradation possible when high souls misuse power.

Vayu devata, jal devata, and the others — souls who once governed the elements — are now mostly walking the earth as ordinary humans. The ancient sacred rituals (yagnas) were effective because the devatas were truly listening; the same yagnas today produce only a fraction of their former effect, because most of the addressee-souls have become humans themselves.

Conversely, sometimes souls rise. A human soul that earns enough spiritual merits (punya) through unconditional services, devotion and inner cultivation may take a deva birth in swarglok. Such souls then enjoy refined pleasures for ages. Eventually, however, even those punya are exhausted, and the soul falls back to human form to begin again. This rising-and-falling within the cycles of birth is the great trap from which only true liberation provides exit.

Bapuji teaches that the present age is unique in the entire history of this creation. Two opposing currents are at work simultaneously. On one side, the descent is at its lowest, souls have never been more tamopradhan. On the other side, the very highest souls, children of the infinite, are taking birth on earth specifically to anchor the great transformation. This is why the knowledge being given now is unlike anything given before. The seed of the new age is being planted now.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma upar bhi jaati hai aur neeche bhi giri hai — sab swayam ke karm aur gyan se.”

“Souls both rise and fall — entirely through their own karma and knowledge.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

The Soul Across Eighty-Four Lakh Yonis

The sanatan teaching of the eighty-four lakh yonis (species of existence) describes the immense range of forms a soul can take across its long wandering. From the simplest insects through fish, reptiles, birds, animals, mammals, to humans and beyond — eighty-four lakh species are distinguished.

Bapuji teaches that the soul's movement through this yonis (species of existence) is not random. It is determined by the soul-power and karmic recordings carried in the causal body. A soul that has built strong soul-power and clarity moves into bodies appropriate for awareness — eventually into human form. A soul that has acted destructively, weakly, or cruelly may descend into less aware forms — into birds, animals, or insects.

Most souls in non-human yonis cannot work toward their own liberation. Bapuji explains the reason simply: in those forms there is no free will of the kind necessary for spiritual progress. An animal acts according to its instinct and the imprints of its causal body. It cannot choose to meditate, cannot generate the sustained pure resolve that purifies karma. It can only live out the karmic momentum it carries, accumulating slight new karmas along the way.

This is why human birth is celebrated as devatas-also-long-for, extremely rare. In human birth, free will returns. The intellect can question. The heart can yearn. The discipline of yog becomes possible. Only in human form can a soul break the eighty-four lakh cycle entirely.

Bapuji often points out that animals are not condemned forever. Their journey too will end. At the close of cycles — particularly at the great cosmic transitions — even animal souls receive their release. But for the individual animal soul, this can be many thousands of years away. The wise human, Bapuji says, recognises this and treats every form of life with reverence.

There is also a sub-pattern within the yonis. Some bodies are part of food-chains where one species was deliberately created to balance another. Bapuji has explained that as creatures multiplied early in cosmic history, predators were established to keep numbers in balance. This is the deeper reason for the painful design of nature where one form survives by consuming another. It is not cruelty by an external designer; it is one of the corrections set in motion by Brahma when the original harmony of free creation broke down.

“Even devas long for human birth — it is this rarest of opportunities.”

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINE

Time Cycles — Yug, Yugantar, Manvantar

To understand the soul's place in the cosmos, Bapuji teaches that one must first understand cosmic time. The Shastras provide the map, and according to Bapuji, divine vision (divya drishti) confirms it precisely.

The smallest major unit of cosmic time is the yug. Four yugas — Satyug, Tretayug, Dwaparyug, and Kalyug — together form one yugantar. Their durations follow a fixed proportion: Kalyug lasts 4,32,000 years; Dwapar is twice that length; Treta is three times; and Satya is four times. Together, one full yugantar spans approximately 43,20,000 years.

Seventy-one yugantar form one manvantar, and fourteen manvantars form one kalp — one day of Brahma. Bapuji explains that a single day of Brahma lasts approximately 8.64 billion years. At the end of every such day comes kalp pralay, during which the three lower lokas dissolve. Brahma's night follows, equal in duration to his day, and then creation begins again.

Brahma's lifespan extends to one hundred divine years. Bapuji teaches that humanity currently exists in the second parardh of Brahma's life, specifically within the seventh manvantar, the twenty-eighth yugantar, and its present Kalyug phase.

Bapuji often emphasizes this immense scale to challenge modern claims that the entire world cycle lasts only five thousand years. Compared to Brahma's cosmic timeline, five thousand years represent only a tiny fragment of one yugantar. To reduce cosmic existence to such a small span, he says, is to misunderstand the structure of creation itself.

These vast cycles matter because the soul travels through them. According to Bapuji, some souls in this solar system originated near the beginning of Brahma's first day and have wandered through countless births across many yugantar. Others entered creation later. The age and journey of each soul influence its destiny. Yet ultimately every soul reaches a decisive moment: either it remains trapped in the cycle of birth and death, or it begins the return journey toward its source.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Brahma ka ek din hi aath arab chausath crore saal ka hai — atma yeh sab paar kar rahi hai.”

“One day and night of Brahma span 8.64 billion years — and through all of this the soul continues its journey.”

Bapuji further explains the stages of cosmic dissolution. At the end of every day of Brahma comes kalp pralay. Vishnu, sustaining cosmic order, manifests the heat of twelve suns. Bhulok, Bhuvarlok, and Swarglok are reduced to ash. Gross physical life dissolves, while beings existing in subtler three-element bodies survive. Souls residing in Mahalok and higher realms remain untouched.

After Brahma's long night, creation begins again. The lokas are restored, life re-emerges, and preserved seeds of existence give rise to new creation. The Matsya Avatar symbolizes this preservation of life through cosmic dissolution.

At the completion of Brahma's hundred years comes mahakal pralay — the great dissolution. Bapuji teaches that Shiva enters the sun and generates kal agni, the fire of time itself. Entire brahmands, lokas, and celestial worlds are consumed. Here, for the first time, even souls are at risk. Souls burdened by immense accumulated paap ignite within that cosmic fire, and their individual identity is destroyed. This is the soul-destruction Bapuji describes with such gravity.

Beyond this lies maha mahakal pralay, the dissolution of countless brahmands together. Mahashiva absorbs innumerable universes back into himself, each brahmand existing like a cell or pore within the infinite cosmic form.

Bapuji explains that this knowledge is not intended to create fear, but awareness. Souls that have performed inner purification, attained knowledge, and connected with their source remain protected even during cosmic dissolution. In such a universe, knowledge and yog are not optional; they are the path to liberation and stability.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Brahma ke ek din mein lok bante aur jaate hain — gyan hi atma ko sthir rakhta hai.”

“In Brahma’s single day, worlds arise and dissolve — only knowledge keeps the soul steady.”

Bapuji describes several levels of pralay, each operating on a different cosmic scale. Ardh pralay is a partial dissolution that periodically clears accumulated negativity from Earth. Wickedness is destroyed while virtuous life survives. Souls themselves do not perish; they remain in subtle atmospheric layers until conditions for life return.

Pralay is a greater dissolution in which civilizations may vanish, though souls continue to exist. Vishnu preserves the seeds of future creation, allowing life to begin again after destruction subsides.

Kalp pralay dissolves the three lower lokas at the end of Brahma's day. Devatas and higher beings survive because their subtler three-element bodies withstand the dissolution that destroys gross five-element existence.

Mahakal pralay, however, is the stage where even the soul's continued existence comes into question. Shiva's kal agni consumes the entire brahmand, and souls weighed down by centuries of karmic darkness are themselves destroyed.

Maha mahakal pralay expands this dissolution further, absorbing countless brahmands back into Mahashiva. Bapuji even describes black holes as remnants of completed mahakal pralays — burnt brahmands still moving silently through the cosmic structure.

Beyond all pralays, Bapuji speaks of Behad ki Maha Mukti — the supreme liberation granted directly by the Almighty Authority. Unlike destruction, this is liberation into supreme light and ultimate freedom.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Pralay anek hai — magar mahakal pralay mein hi atma ka antim swaroop ka prashn aata hai.”

“There are many forms of dissolution — but only in mahakal pralay does the ultimate fate of the soul itself come into question.”

Time Cycle of Various Types of Dissolution in our Creation

Types of dissolution	When does it happen?	Time cycle/ period	How does it happen and who is the medium for the dissolution	What happens to all souls
Ardh Pralay	After completion of four yugas= 1 chaturyuga = 1 yugantar.	43,20,000 years	Dissolution by Shankar one of prime deity of our Brahmand.	Sinful souls are subjected to death
Pralay	After completion of 71 chaturyugas= 71 yugantar= 1 manvantara =71 ardh pralay	308.5 million years	The dissolution occurred by inundation whole earth in water known as Jal pralay. This is done by Vishnu, one of the prime deities of the brahmand.	All of creation on earth is destroyed
Kalp Pralay	After completion of 1000 chaturyugas=14 manvantar	4.32 billion years	It is carried out by Vishnu through extreme temperature	All souls of bhu-lok, buvarlok, swarg-lok are dissolved the extreme

	=1 day of brahma		equivalent to the combined power of 12 suns. During this, the entirety of bhu- lok(earth), bhavar lok, and swarg- lok are burnt to ashes	heat energy of the fire element
Maha Kalp Pralay	On=100 years of brahma=2 paradh=36 500 kalp pralay=1 second of mahashiv	311.04 trillion years	The creator shiv enters into the sun of the brahmand and creates a tremendous fire called kal agni which engulfs all creation inside the brahmand	The entire brahmand including all 14 lokas and all souls created by shiv are dissolved in the kaal agni
Maha- Kaal Pralay	One second of param mahashiv= 10000 years of Mahashiv	(311.0 4 trillion x 315.56 billion) years	Maha-shiv turns into Mahakaal and creates kaal agni which absorbs infinite solar systems.	All solar systems are dissolved so all creation of shiv and mhashiv end in this pralay.

PART FIVE

The Path of Liberation

CHAPTER THIRTY

Can the Soul Be Destroyed?

This is one of the most asked questions, and Bapuji's answer requires precision. Ordinarily, the soul cannot be destroyed. It is ajar amar avinashi — never aging, immortal, indestructible. Through ardh pralay, through pralay, through kalp pralay — through all these dissolutions, the soul remains.

But there is a higher dissolution where the soul itself can perish. This occurs in mahakal pralay, at the end of one hundred years of Brahma. When Shiva enters the sun and creates the fire of time, the accumulated sins of one hundred years of Brahma — accumulated within souls that did not free themselves — catches fire. The soul that has stored too much darkness is consumed by its own darkness in this fire. The very identity dissolves. This, Bapuji says, is the one form of soul-destruction that is real.

There is also another dissolution Bapuji speaks of, which is not destruction but liberation. This is Behad ki Maha Mukti — the supreme liberation given by the Almighty Authority. Here, when the entire multiverse reaches the limit of its descent, the Almighty Authority opens his abode and grants liberation to souls which originates beyond multiverse in a single instant. There is no fire, no pain, no burning. The soul is drawn into param prakash and ascends. Those who have attained inner liberation while alive — Jeevan Mukti — also receive a corresponding higher state.

Bapuji's teaching here is profound. Without knowledge, the soul faces the danger of being burned. With knowledge and connection to the supreme, the soul faces only liberation. The same cosmic dissolution that destroys one kind of soul liberates another. The difference is the inner work the soul has done.

Mahakal pralay is feared in the shastras precisely because of this risk. The accumulated darkness of a soul that did not turn to the light is the fuel of its own destruction. To avoid this, Bapuji teaches with urgency, every soul should turn now. Now, while life is in the body, while time remains, while the door is open. Behad ki Maha Mukti is the fortunate path. Mahakal pralay is the dangerous one. The choice is made by how the soul lives.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma vaise to amar hai, par mahakal pralay mein vinasht ho sakti hai — gyan hi raksha hai.”

“The soul is ordinarily eternal, but in mahakal pralay it can be destroyed — only knowledge protects.”

CHAPTER THIRTY- ONE

Black Holes — Echoes of Mahakal Pralay

Bapuji has given a striking teaching about black holes that science is still slowly approaching. Black holes, he says, are not random cosmic formations. They are the residues of completed mahakal pralays — the dark imprint left after entire brahmands have been consumed.

When a Solar System reaches the close of its hundred-year cycle of Brahma, mahakal pralay occurs within it. The accumulated negative residues — the darkness left behind after the burning-collapse into a single point of intense gravitational pull. Light cannot escape. Matter cannot escape. The remains of an entire solar system are now a black hole, drifting within the wider structure of the galaxy. This is why black holes appear scattered through the universe in such numbers. Bapuji says supermassive black holes at the centres of galaxies are particularly significant — they are the gravitational anchors around which the great structures of the cosmos cohere.

From a soul's perspective, black holes are not places to enter. The pull is total. The information is dissolved.

They are the cosmic equivalent of negativity accumulated to the point of consuming itself. Bapuji teaches them not as a doom but as a record — a sign that the cosmos is not infinite in the way materialism imagines but is structured by cycles, dissolutions, and rebirths at every scale.

There is wisdom in this teaching for the individual soul as well. As negativity accumulates within an unliberated soul, the soul develops its own miniature gravitational pull — a kind of inner black hole that draws everything in toward darkness. Suffering grows heavier. Awareness contracts. Possibilities narrow. To avoid this inner black hole becoming the soul's permanent fate, the inner light must be cultivated. Param prakash, drawn down through yog with the supreme, is the only force capable of dispersing this inner darkness.

“Black hole bhi paap ka antim parinaam hai — atma ke andar bhi yahi niyam chalta hai.”

“A black hole is the final residue of accumulated darkness — the same law operates within the soul.”

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

What Is Paramdham, Vishnulok, Shivpuri and the Higher Realms

What Is Paramdham

Above all the lokas of the Solar System stands Paramdham — the supreme abode. Bapuji teaches that Paramdham is not a physical realm in the way the lower lokas are physical. It is a region of pure light where there is no matter, no gross element, no body, and no worldly identity — only the formless presence of Shiva and the souls that have returned to their original home.

In Paramdham, Shiva exists as Nirakar — formless, like a point of supreme light. Bapuji explains that God is not a human-like being but the original consciousness from which all souls emerged. “God is light, Gott is Jyot, Allah Noor” — every tradition has touched this truth in its own language. Souls in Paramdham also exist as points of light beside Shiva, free from karma, attachment, and material form. This is the state of pure being.

Bapuji teaches that Paramdham is not distant merely in terms of space. It is the highest in vibration and the most refined in existence. Souls rise toward it naturally when they become light enough within themselves. As long as karma, attachment, ego, and worldly impressions remain heavy, the soul cannot ascend fully. The journey to Paramdham is therefore not a physical journey but a refinement of consciousness.

Time itself functions differently there. According to Bapuji, one second in Paramdham may equal approximately one lakh Earth years. The soul there does not experience anxiety, waiting, or decay. It experiences eternity in stillness.

The path upward through creation is layered. Above the earthly and celestial lokas lies Brahmapuri, then Vishnulok (Vaikunth), then Shivpuri, and finally Paramdham. Beyond even this brahmand exist higher cosmic dimensions: the Maha Paramdham of the galaxy where Mahashiva resides, the Param Maha Paramdham of the universe where Param Mahashiva dwells, and still greater realms culminating in the supreme abode of the Almighty Authority — the source of all multiverses and all souls.

Vishnulok, Shivpuri, and the Higher Realms

Bapuji describes Vishnulok, also known as Vaikunth, as a highly refined realm above Brahmapuri.

Vishnulok is unique because its existence is deeply infused with Param Tattva. The bodies there are said to be composed of fifty percent Param Tattva and fifty percent subtle refined elements. Because of this composition, souls experience Atindriya Sukh — bliss beyond ordinary sensory pleasure.

Yet Bapuji teaches that bliss itself is not the final destination. Bliss is active and sweet, while peace is deeper and stiller. After immense experience of divine bliss, the soul begins to long for complete peace. This longing draws it higher toward Shivpuri.

Shivpuri is the abode of Shiva-Shakti, where Mahashiva resides in refined luminous form. Here the soul experiences profound Shanti — a peace deeper than pleasure itself. Bodies become almost entirely composed of Param Tattva, and the principle of divine light predominates. Souls remain here in immense stillness for vast spans of cosmic time.

Above Shivpuri lies Paramdham itself — the realm of Paramshanti (supreme peace). Here even the experience of peace dissolves into absolute stillness. There is no element, no form, no individuality. The soul exists only as pure light beside Shiva Nirakar.

Bapuji also explains an important distinction regarding liberation. A soul that reaches Vishnulok no longer returns to Earth because it has crossed beyond the gravitational pull of Maya and the lower cosmic fields. From Vishnulok onward, the soul only ascends further. Brahmapuri, however, still lies within the range of subtle attachment, and souls there may return if detachment is incomplete.

Thus liberation is not a sudden leap but a gradual ascent through refinement:

- From Earth consciousness to Bhuvarelok, From Bhuvarelok to Swarglok, From Swarglok to Maharlok, From Maharlok to Janlok, From Janlok to Taplok, From Taplok to Brahmapuri, From Brahmapuri to Vishnulok, From Vishnulok to Shivpuri
- And finally to Paramdham

Each higher realm represents a subtler state of consciousness. Each ascent is earned through purification, detachment, spiritual knowledge, and inner light.

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE

Mukti vs Moksha — Bhakti Marg and Gyan Marg

Many people use the words mukti and moksha as if they mean the same thing. Bapuji teaches a careful distinction that matters enormously to anyone seeking liberation.

In the bhakti marg — the path of devotion — mukti and moksha are sometimes used interchangeably. Both refer to the soul's release from the cycle of birth and death. The devotee aims to reach Krishna, Vishnu, Ram, Shiva, or whichever form they worship. They follow the prescribed forms — fasting, pilgrimage, kirtan, prayer. The destination, in their understanding, is unity with the chosen deity in the higher loka.

In the gyan marg — the path of knowledge — the distinction sharpens. Mukti, properly understood in this lineage, means the dissolution of the individual soul itself into the supreme light. The soul's separate existence ends. There is no longer a 'me' that has been freed; there is only the supreme light that absorbed what had once been separate.

Jeevan Mukti, by contrast, is liberation while soul still lives beyond Pralays. The soul continues to exist as itself; but the inner identification has dissolved. Such a soul lives in the world without being bound by it. Bapuji teaches that the highest gyan path leads not just to mukti — which involves loss of individual identity — but to Jeevan Mukti, in which the soul retains its identity while being completely free. This is the rarer and higher attainment. The soul becomes karmatit (beyond karma), bhavatit (beyond emotion), and gunatit (beyond the gunas) all at once, while still in human form.

Why does the gyan marg lead higher than the bhakti marg? Bapuji explains: the bhakti devotee may reach the higher lokas of their chosen deity, but they often retain attachment to that deity, that form, that worship. They are bound by their own devotion. The gyani recognises that even attachment to a form is a subtle covering of the soul. Letting go of every form, including the loved divine form, is the final letting-go. From there, the soul can ascend to paramdham itself.

Bapuji says. Bhakti is the foundation. The fruit of bhakti, when taken to its limit, is gyan. The devotee who keeps surrendering will eventually surrender even the duality of devotee-and-god. At that moment, bhakti has flowered into gyan. From there, mukti is direct.

There are rare souls in whom bhakti reaches such totality that the boundary itself melts. Bapuji speaks of Mirabai as one such example. She loved Krishna so completely, with such purity and absorption, that her individual self gradually dissolved into the form she worshipped. The shastras describe how, in her final moments, she literally melted into the murti of Krishna. Bapuji explains this not as miracle but as principle. When bhakti is total — without ego, without remainder — the worshipper and worshipped become one. The duality that had sustained the devotion can no longer hold. This is bhakti completed.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Bhakti ka phal gyan hai, gyan ka phal Jeevan Mukti — yahi marg ki sabse uchchi sthiti hai.”

“The fruit of devotion is knowledge; the fruit of knowledge is Jeevan Mukti — the highest possible state on the path.”

CHAPTER THIRTY-FOUR

The Path of the Brahmgyani — OM, Kundalini and the Eight Chakras

Bapuji teaches the classical path of the brahmgyani — the soul that has known the formless absolute — with both depth and modern clarity. This was once the discipline of those who, knowing the limits of all forms, sought direct realisation of the formless brahm.

The traditional method begins with twelve years of brahmacharya — sustained celibacy and energetic restraint. During this period, the inner energy that would normally flow outward through the senses is conserved and redirected upward. Combined with the recitation of OM — the original sound, the vibration that contains all vibrations — this energy begins to move along the central channel.

The energy ascends through the chakras. Bapuji uses the traditional sequence: muladhar at the base, svadhisthan, manipur, anahat, vishuddha, and ajna at the brow — the sixth chakra. Above these, in advanced sadhana, opens a seventh and an eighth chakra: the sahasragar at the crown, where the soul connects with the higher Creations, and a tenth chakra Bapuji refers to in deeper transmissions, where soul consciousness emerges fully.

The agya chakra is the eighth in this counting because it sits at the brow, as the gateway between the lower and higher centres. When it opens, the inner eye begins to see beyond physical form. Bapuji teaches that this is the divya drishti — the divine vision — that allows the Brahmgyani (Enlightened being with knowledge of the Divine Truth) to perceive subtle realms directly. Bapuji has it himself, and many of the teachings in this book come from what he has seen with this inner sight.

When sahastragar opens, the soul becomes connected to the wider Creation. The brahmgyani can perceive the lokas, can travel in samadhi to higher realms, can witness the structures of creation directly. From sahastragar, the energy can finally rise to its destination — the consciousness of the soul itself. The yogi realises 'I am soul,' not as a thought but as a direct experience.

From this realisation, the brahmgyani naturally moves toward the source of the soul. Bapuji teaches that the brahmgyani, when shedding the body, becomes a point of pure consciousness with no remaining covering. Such a soul can travel directly to paramdham without intervening stages. Bypassing the lower subtle layers entirely, it crosses to its source in moments.

Bapuji adds an important note for the present age. Many fashionable forms of kundalini work, chakra meditation, and third-eye activation have spread without the necessary foundation. Without true knowledge of the soul and the supreme, manipulating these centres can damage the system. The energy rises but has no proper destination. Bapuji's teaching is consistent: gyan first, then yog, then natural opening of the centres. Knowledge is the discipline; the openings are the result.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Kundalini se pehle gyan, gyan se yog, yog se atma swaroop ki anubhuti.”

“Knowledge first, then yog, then through yog the realisation of the soul.”

CHAPTER THIRTY-FIVE

Karmatit, Bhavatit, Gunatit — The Triple Freedom

Bapuji teaches the highest internal state of the soul through three terms that, taken together, describe complete liberation while still alive.

Karmatit means beyond karma. The soul has dissolved all accumulated karmic recordings in the causal body. There is no more sanchit karma waiting to find its outlet. Bapuji says when the causal body is fully charged with param prakash, every old recording is burned out, and the soul is free of further karmic accumulation. New actions do not bind such a soul because they are performed without ego, without attachment, without claim of doership.

Bhavatit means beyond emotion. The soul is no longer pulled by the storms of feeling — anger, fear, grief, lust, pride. Emotions still arise as natural responses, but they no longer take residence. They pass through and vanish. The soul remains steady. Bapuji says this is the inner stillness of one who has gone beyond the heart's storms because they no longer identify with the heart.

Gunatit means beyond the gunas — beyond sattva, rajas, and tamas. Most souls operate within these three qualities. Sometimes peaceful, sometimes active, sometimes dull, they shift between them. The gunatit soul has transcended this entire game. They are not even bound by the goodness of sattva. They abide in a place beyond all three, in pure being.

Together these three describe Jeevan Mukti — liberation while alive. Such a soul, Bapuji teaches, walks the earth as if not on it. They eat without attachment to taste. They speak without attachment to outcome. They love without binding. They work without claiming results. They live as fully as anyone, but the core is unbound.

There are deeper inner stages within this triple freedom that Bapuji describes using terms from the shastras. Iccha matram avidya (desire alone is ignorance) that is, the soul has so completely transcended wanting that even a flicker of desire registers as a kind of forgetting.

Nashto mohah smṛtir labdhā “Delusion is destroyed, and true remembrance has been regained. A soul in these stages no longer has anything to bind it to bodies or worlds. When such a soul leaves the body, it passes upward to paramdham without obstruction, because there is nothing left in it for the lower lokas to grip.

There is a profound subtlety. Bapuji teaches that a soul can be karmatit and not yet bhavatit. They have dissolved their karmic load but still have emotional residues. Or they can be bhavatit and not yet gunatit. Each step is an inner work. The complete state — karmatit, bhavatit, gunatit, leading into iccha matram avidya — is the rarest and highest, the foundation of true Jeevan Mukti.

This state is reached, Bapuji says, only by sustained yog with the supreme combined with the giving up of every false identification. It is not produced by ritual. It is not produced by reading scriptures. It is produced by the soul actually relinquishing what binds it. The doorway is the same for everyone. The walking through is each individual's work.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Karmatit, bhavatit, gunatit — yahi Jeevan Mukti ki teen seediyaan hain.”

“Beyond karma, beyond emotion, beyond the gunas — these are the three steps of liberation while alive.”

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

Stories of Real Liberation

The shastras hold many stories of souls who walked these paths in their own time. Bapuji draws on them not as legend but as instruction, since the same paths remain open today.

The story of Vishwamitra and Trishanku reveals the complexities of the path. Vishwamitra, the great sage, did intense tapasya for many lifetimes. Yet because pride remained in him, his title of brahmishi was withheld. His austerities had reached the highest, but the inner residue of ego held him back. Even when he tried to send king Trishanku to swarg with his sankalp-power, the result was incomplete. Trishanku hung between earth and heaven, neither fully welcomed above nor returned below. The story teaches that knowledge and tapasya without complete inner purification produce strange in-between states.

Prahlad Jani, in our own time, was the yogi reported to have lived without food and water for many decades, sustained directly by inner subsistence. Bapuji confirms this is possible. A soul that has reached deep inner connection draws sustenance from prana and from the supreme directly. The body becomes light, almost translucent, requiring less and less of the gross. Such cases prove what is possible when the soul is connected at depth.

Astavakra, the sage with eight crooked limbs, illustrates a different teaching. Bapuji notes that even great sages can carry karmic residues from past lives. Astavakra's body was distorted because his soul carried unresolved imprints from earlier lifetimes. His knowledge was supreme, but his outer form bore the marks of unfinished work. The lesson: high gyan does not always produce a perfect body, because the body responds to the entire causal record, not only to the present life's wisdom.

Bapuji also speaks of brahmurishi's soul who attained the formless state directly. Knowing Brahm to be Nirakari (formless) they took refuge in Jyotirling. Bapuji teaches a distinct between shivling & Jyotirlinga. Jyotirling refers to a column of pure formless light that the brahmurishis entered to merge with the formless Brahm. Through Jyotirling, the soul travelled directly to paramdham, bypassing the lower lokas, including the obstacles of the asuras and shaitans of the lower subtle layers.

The brahmishi's soul path is the most direct, Bapuji teaches. The soul, becomes Brahm. There is no journey through intermediate stages, no struggle with subtle obstacles. In one second, the soul that has known brahm becomes brahmswaroop and arrives at the source.

These stories share one teaching: liberation is real, the path is real, and the same path remains open. What was possible for these souls is possible for any sincere seeker today. The cosmos has not changed its rules. Only the average level of seriousness has fallen. Where seriousness returns, the doorway is the same.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

PART SIX

Souls Across the Cosmos

CHAPTER THIRTY-SEVEN

Why Souls Cannot Easily Reach Paramdham

If the destination is so glorious, why do so few souls reach it? Bapuji's answer is direct: most souls have not built the soul-power required for the journey, and the cosmic obstacles between earth and the supreme are real.

The first obstacle is the soul's own karmic load. The causal body is heavy with recordings of many lives. To rise, the soul must lighten this load — not by force, but by burning it through sustained yog and surrender. Most souls do not undertake this work. They live their lives without addressing the karmic foundation, and so when they leave the body, they cannot rise far.

The second obstacle is the layered structure of the cosmos itself. Above earth lies the layer of bhuts and pishachas — the lower subtle world, where many souls become trapped. Above that lies the realm of the shaitans — the negative subtle kingdom Bapuji has described, between five hundred and a thousand kilometres above earth. Above that lies the deva realm of swarglok with its own seductions of pleasure. Each of these is an obstacle in itself. A soul that lacks soul-power gets caught at one of these levels and cannot proceed.

The third obstacle is the soul's own inner residue. Even good souls who do tapasya can find themselves caught at brahmapuri, where the gravitational pull of the sun of this brahmand still reaches. From brahmapuri, the soul can see its old life, loved ones, earthly engagements and a single thought of attachment is enough to draw it back. Bapuji has emphasised this many times: the path is not finished until paramdham is reached. Falling back from brahmapuri after long ages of work is one of the saddest patterns in the cosmos.

The fourth obstacle is the obstruction of the negative powers of this age. Bapuji teaches that the lower subtle world has become particularly active in kalyug. There is more interference in the path than in earlier ages. Souls trying to do good work face opposition not only from human society but also from subtle entities. This is why connection with the supreme is so urgent — only the supreme has power great enough to bypass these obstructions.

What is the way through? Bapuji's answer is consistent: gyan and yog. Knowledge of the soul, the supreme, structure of the cosmos. And direct connection — yog — with the Almighty Authority himself. With these two, the soul gathers the power to bypass the obstacles. Without them, the soul drifts into one or another trap and remains there for ages.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

*“Paramdham tak pahunchne mein kai rok hain;
gyan aur yog se hi raah khulti hai.”*

“Many obstacles stand on the way to paramdham; only knowledge and yog clear the path.”

CHAPTER THIRTY-EIGHT

The Need for Spiritual Knowledge

Bapuji teaches that no liberation is possible without true knowledge. People who say 'just teach me yog, I do not need the philosophy' are like patients demanding surgery without medical training. Without knowing what is wrong and what is right, no inner operation can succeed.

Krishna himself stated this in the Geeta: 'I am not attained by jap, tap, dhyan, or yog alone (Chanting, Austerity, Meditation, spiritual communion, respectively).' Knowledge of who one is, who the supreme is, and the relationship between them is essential. Without that knowledge, even disciplined practice loses its direction.

What knowledge, does Bapuji mean? First, knowledge of the soul — atma gyan. Knowing that one is not the body but the soul. Knowing the soul's true nature as a point of conscious energy. Knowing the soul's three layers — physical, subtle, causal. Without this base, no spiritual movement is possible.

Second, knowledge of the supreme — paramatma gyan. Knowing who the Almighty Authority is. Knowing that he is the source of all souls, the one to whom they will eventually return. Knowing his attributes, that he is the ocean of love, the ocean of mercy, the ocean of wisdom. Without this, the soul has no destination and no model.

Third, knowledge of the cosmic structure -- knowledge of Solar system, of galaxies, of universes, of multiverses. Bapuji teaches that the soul that does not know the structure cannot navigate it. Just as a sailor needs charts of the sea, the soul needs the map of the cosmos. This is the behad gyan — the unbounded knowledge — that Bapuji has been giving for decades.

Fourth, knowledge of the world drama. Knowing that creation runs in cycles, that the present age is unique, that great transformation is coming, that one's own work in this life has cosmic significance. Without this, the soul drifts in petty concerns, missing the gravity of the moment.

Bapuji says the seeker who tries to skip knowledge will not reach the destination. Those who say 'just give me the technique' are missing the truth that without understanding the technique cannot be performed correctly. Knowledge and practice together — gyan-yog — is the proven path. They support each other. Knowledge gives direction; practice provides the substance.

“Bina gyan ke yog adhura hai, bina yog ke gyan adhura hai.”

“Without knowledge, yog is incomplete; without yog, knowledge is incomplete.”

CHAPTER THIRTY-NINE

The Role of Yog and Connection with the Supreme

Yog, in Bapuji's teaching, is precise: the connection of the soul with the supreme. Not body postures or breath techniques. The actual connection of the soul with its source, allowing the supreme power to flow into the soul.

He gives a vivid analogy. Just as electricity needs a connection to the power source to light a bulb, the soul needs connection to the Almighty Authority to receive divine power. The soul is the bulb. The supreme is the power-house. Without the connection, the bulb is dark. With the connection, the soul shines.

The connection is not metaphorical. Bapuji teaches that param prakash actually flows from the supreme into the soul during true yog. This light enters first the soul itself, then radiates outward into the causal body, charging it. As the causal body charges, old karmic recordings dissolve. The soul grows lighter. The subtle body becomes more refined. Eventually the gross body too is affected — health improves, mood lifts, mind steadies.

What makes this connection work? Bapuji teaches it requires two things: atma swaroop, and accurate remembrance. Atma swaroop means abiding in the awareness of being soul, not body. Without this, the connection cannot form because the body cannot connect to the supreme — only the soul can. So the first move is always to remember: 'I am soul.'

Then comes accurate remembrance. The soul remembers the Almighty Authority — not as one of the brahm-lok devatas, not as Krishna or Vishnu or Shiva but as the supreme source beyond all of them.. He is param prakash. Bapuji often suggests calling him 'great-great-great grandfather' to feel the depth of relationship. The soul is his great-great-great grandchild. The bond is direct.

When the soul, established in atma swaroop, remembers the Almighty Authority with clarity, the connection forms. Power begins to flow. The seeker may feel warmth, light, stillness, a deep peace. Over time these become the soul's natural state. Bapuji says many sincere students experience profound shifts within two to three months of consistent practice — and within six months to one year, the soul has changed substantially.

Yog, in this sense, is the practical doorway to liberation. Knowledge tells the soul where to go. Yog supplies the energy to make the journey. Together they form the complete path.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Yog maana atma ka parmatma se kanekshan — yahi sabse uchcha karya hai.”

“Yog means the soul's connection with the supreme — this is the highest of all activities.”

CHAPTER FORTY

Souls Beyond Earth

Bapuji's teaching extends far beyond earth. He teaches that the soul's family is not confined to one planet. The cosmos is full of life — life of many forms, on many bodies, in many Solar systems, across countless galaxies and universes.

Earth is one planet within one Solar systems. Each Solar systems (brahmand) has its own structure of fourteen lokas — seven above, seven below — and at the top its own paramdham, where the Shiva of that brahmand resides. Bapuji teaches that there are countless such brahmand within a galaxy, and countless galaxies within a universe.

At the centre of each galaxy resides Mahashiv of that galaxy, in maha paramdham. He oversees all the brahmands within his galaxy. Around him are arranged the great divine forms of the galaxy — Mahabrahma, Mahavishnu, Mahadev, and the great shaktis — each governing the corresponding levels.

Above the galaxy, at the level of the universe, resides Param Mahashiv in param maha paramdham. He oversees all the galaxies within his universe.

Above the universe lies the great universe, with even higher beings. And finally, above all of these, the multiverse — the realm of countless universes — overseen by the Almighty Authority, the source of all.

Souls in different brahmands are at different stages of evolution. Some brahmands have advanced civilisations rich in soul-power. Others are in early stages. Some brahmands are in the high satyug of their cycle, others in their kalyug. The cosmic clock differs from place to place.

Bapuji teaches that earth is not in the most exalted position currently. We are deep in kalyug. But earth is in a special position — it is here that the great transformation is being anchored, here that the children of the infinite are being born. The world drama Bapuji speaks of is not local to earth alone; it has implications across the whole multiverse. The transformation of earth, when it comes, will be a model for souls across countless brahmands.

PART SEVEN

The Present Age and the Great Transformation

CHAPTER FORTY-ONE

Kaliyug and Tamopradhan Soul

We live, Bapuji teaches, in the darkest part of Kaliyug. The descent of the soul, which began at the close of the original satyug long ages ago, has now reached its lowest point. The average soul today is profoundly Tamopradhan — heavy, dull, identified with body and possessions, far from inner light.

Bapuji describes the symptoms with characteristic directness. People do not know who they are. They do not know what death means. They confuse pleasure with happiness, attachment with love, knowledge with information. Their minds are restless. Their hearts are anxious. Their bodies are filled with diseases that did not exist in earlier ages. The very atmosphere they breathe and the water they drink are themselves degraded.

Why has this happened? The descent is natural to the cosmic cycle. Each Yug brings less subtle power than the one before. Kaliyug, by its nature, is the least subtle, the most material, the most identification-bound. Souls have been descending for millions of years; we are seeing the bottom of that descent.

Bapuji also teaches that there are specific characteristics of this kalyug. Negative subtle entities—ghosts, malevolent souls, demons etc, are far more active than in earlier ages. They have grown bold because the human population has grown enormous and the human inner state has grown weak. Where eight hundred crore humans walk, the number of subtle souls active around them is many times greater.

False teachers proliferate. Bapuji speaks plainly about this. Many present themselves as gurus, but their inner foundation is hollow. Some have built large followings through subtle world support — negative entities help them gather crowds because the crowd's attention serves the entities' own desires. The leaders sometimes do not even know they are being used. Their teachings appear spiritual but lead nowhere upward. He gives no names but warns the seeker repeatedly: discriminate carefully.

Money, fame, sensory pleasure, and ego have replaced inner cultivation as the goal of most lives. People can live their whole life without once asking what they truly are. They die having never known the soul. Bapuji says this is the saddest fate of all — to be human, with the rare opportunity that human form provides, and to waste it on what cannot last beyond a single breath.

Yet kalyug is not the end. Within the very depth of the descent lies the seed of return. The cosmic clock is now turning. The great transformation is approaching. Bapuji teaches that the lowest point is also the turning point. Those who recognise it can ride the change. Those who do not will be carried by forces they did not see coming.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Kalyug ki kala mein bhi parivartan ki kala chhupi hai — pehchaan lo aur taiyaar ho jao.”

“Within the darkness of kalyug hides the art of transformation — recognise it and prepare.”

CHAPTER FORTY-TWO

Judgment Day and Global Transformation

Many traditions speak of a coming day of judgment. Bapuji confirms that this is real, and what is coming is not ordinary change. It is the resetting of the entire cosmic clock, what shastras call Maha Parivartan, the great transformation. Not that takes the world from kalyug to a new satyug.

How does this transformation come about? Bapuji teaches it is not produced by political revolution or scientific breakthrough. It is produced by a precise alignment of cosmic forces. The Almighty Authority is present on earth. The 108, 16,000, and 9 lakh children of the infinite are taking birth and beginning their work. The vibrations of paramshanti are being released into the atmosphere through their lives and through Bapuji's teachings. At the same time, the karmic accumulation of kalyug has reached a saturation point. The conditions for great change are aligned.

Bapuji has spoken of certain dates that have circulated in spiritual circles-1976, 1986, 1996 — as moments when the great transformation was almost ready. These were sankalps, resolves, generated in deep meditation by powerful souls anticipating the change. The actual transformation did not occur on those exact dates because conditions had not fully ripened, but the vibrations released by those sankalps have been working within the atmosphere ever since, slowly accelerating the actual change.

What will the transformation look like? Bapuji teaches it will involve significant disruption of present systems — economic, political, social. Old structures cannot survive the new vibration. Civilisations built on greed, exploitation and falsehood cannot remain standing as the new vibrations enter the field. There will be a period of intense change--earthquakes, climate disturbances, political, banking collapses. None of these are the end. They are the necessary clearing of what cannot continue.

From this clearing will emerge a new world. Bapuji teaches the new world will be the satyug of the next cycle — but also more than that. Because of the work being done now by the children of the infinite and the direct presence of the Almighty Authority, the new world will have qualities no previous satyug had. It will be a 100-kala world — a world of complete supreme essence, where bodies are again largely param tattva (Supreme elements), where lifespans are vastly longer, where every soul lives in connection with the supreme.

How long until this comes? Bapuji speaks of the change as having already begun and accelerating. He does not give exact calendars because the precise timing depends on the resolves of the souls now incarnated. Each soul that turns toward gyan and yog accelerates the change. Each soul that resists delays the personal arrival of relief but cannot stop the cosmic movement.

The wise stance is to align oneself now. Whatever role one is meant to play in the transformation, that role unfolds best when the soul is established in atma swaroop and connected with the supreme. From that ground, the changes ahead will be navigable. Without that ground, they will be terrifying. The cosmos is offering the same instruction it has always offered, only with more urgency: turn inward, connect with your source, and act from there.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Kayamat ka din nahi, naye yug ka aagman hai — taiyari abhi se karni chahiye.”

“It is not a day of doom but the dawn of a new age — the preparation must begin now.”

Coming of Transformation Stage

Bapuji teaches three layers of preparation. First, prepare the soul. Establish atma swaroop. Build the connection with the supreme through daily yog. Begin to dissolve the karmic load. The soul that has done this work will move through the changes with steadiness. The soul that has not done this work will be tossed by them.

Second, prepare the family and immediate community. Bring this knowledge to those who will receive it. Bapuji says do not waste energy trying to convince those who are not ready. But where there is openness — among children, among friends, among colleagues who ask sincere questions — share. The new world will be built by communities, not by isolated individuals. Begin the seed of community now.

Third, prepare the broader environment. Send out vibrations of param shanti. The Param Shanti Maha Mantra, Bapuji teaches, is one of the great gifts of this age. Repeating 'Param shanti, param shanti' with awareness sends pure vibration into the local atmosphere. As the atmosphere is purified, others nearby benefit even without knowing it. The space changes. People walking through it feel different. This is the slow chemistry of transformation operating through the environment.

Bapuji also teaches that there will be visible signs of the change. Already, certain patterns are emerging. The acceleration of natural disasters. The rise of mental health crises in advanced societies. The turning of younger generations toward spiritual questions in unexpected ways. The simultaneous emergence of darker manifestations — addiction, violence, ideological extremism. These are all signs of the boiling point being reached. The pot is about to overflow. Some content is purified by the heat; some is consumed.

The truthful prediction is not that everything will be peaceful from now on. The transition itself will be turbulent. The peace comes after. Bapuji is honest about this. He does not promise the seeker an easy time. He promises the truth, and the truth is that great change is coming and that the only safe ground is inner alignment.

Yet within this turbulence is the most fortunate moment in cosmic history. Bapuji teaches that the soul incarnated now is incarnated at the pivotal point. To have been born now is itself a sign that the soul has work to do. There is no incarnation without a reason. The reason of the present incarnation, for many souls, is precisely this transformation.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Maha parivartan aa raha hai — atma ko abhi taiyaar karo.”

“The great transformation is coming — prepare the soul now.”

CHAPTER FORTY-THREE

The Children of the Infinite

Bapuji teaches that the most concrete sign of the coming transformation is the actual taking of birth, on earth, of the children of the infinite. Not symbolically. Literally. The 108, the 16,000, the 9 lakh — they are arriving. Many are already born. Many are still children. Many are still to come. They are scattered across nations, languages, cultures, and faiths.

How does Bapuji know this? He teaches from divya drishti. He has seen these souls in samadhi. He has recognised them in conversations with seekers who came to him over decades. Sometimes the soul does not yet know its own identity — the body and circumstances obscure it. But the inner pull is unmistakable. The hunger for behad gyan, the dissatisfaction with anything less, the sense that ordinary life is missing something essential — these are signs of a child of the infinite still adjusting to its assignment.

Bapuji says these souls share certain characteristics. They are not satisfied with conventional spiritual paths. The bhakti of one tradition does not contain them. The philosophy of one school does not contain them. They are restless until they find the unbounded knowledge — knowledge that includes brahmands, galaxies, universes, multiverses, and the Almighty Authority above all of them. Once they encounter such knowledge, they recognise it instantly. It feels like coming home.

Many of these souls have already gathered around Bapuji's teachings, often through unusual chains of events that they later recognise as not ordinary. They were searching for something they could not name. Then a video, a book, a chance encounter brought them to behad gyan. From that moment, their life took a different direction.

Bapuji has spoken of one particular movement of recent times that recognised the gathering of these souls partially. The Brahma Kumari tradition was founded when the soul that had once incarnated as Krishna in dwapar yug took birth again in this age as Dada Lekhraj — known to that movement as Brahma Baba. Through him, behad gyan began to be transmitted in vyakta vani — direct spoken teaching — and later in avyakta vani — subtle inspiration after he had left the body. The movement was a doorway for many of the children of the infinite to begin their re-orientation. Yet, Bapuji teaches, the work of those who came is now wider than any one tradition, because the present cosmic moment is greater than any single lineage can hold.

Such souls are not asked to abandon their ordinary lives. They marry, work, raise families, contribute to society. But the inner orientation is different. They are anchoring the new vibration through whatever role they happen to be in. The teacher anchors it through teaching. The doctor through healing. The artist through art. The parent through parenting. Wherever they are placed, they become a living broadcast of param shanti.

Bapuji's message to them — and to anyone who suspects they may be one of them — is this: trust your inner pull. The hunger for behad gyan is itself the call. Begin the inner work now. Build atma swaroop. Connect with the Almighty Authority. The work of the children of the infinite is largely done invisibly, through the inner state they hold. The world transforms not because they speak loudly but because they exist, present and connected, on earth at this time.

If a reader of this book feels these words speaking directly to them — Bapuji's blessing is steady. The path is open. The work is real. The supreme is closer than the seeker imagines. Begin now.

CHAPTER FORTY-FOUR

The Future of Humanity

Bapuji teaches that the new world coming is unlike any past satyug. It is the 100-kala (soul power) — the world of complete supreme essence, where the descent of the soul into matter is reversed and a new high civilisation emerges.

What does 100-kala mean? Bapuji explains it is the measure of soul-power and bodily refinement. In kalyug, the average soul operates at perhaps 1 or 2 kala — a tiny fraction of its original power. As souls degrade further, the kala drops to almost nothing. In the new world, the kala will be 100 — full original power restored. Bodies will be made largely of supreme elements. The five-element gross body will be replaced by something closer to the original form of the param purushas. Lifespans will be enormously longer. Bapuji has referenced the satyug of past cycles where lifespans were 1 lakh years. The new world's lifespans may be even longer because of the renewed presence of param tattva.

Diseases will largely vanish. The cause of disease, Bapuji teaches, is the imbalance of the subtle body and the heaviness of the causal body. When these are restored to refinement, the gross body — produced from these subtler levels — naturally becomes free of illness. Aging will slow dramatically. Death will return to its original form: ichcha mrityu, death by one's own resolve when the soul determines it is time.

The natural environment will transform. Pure water. Pure air. Soil able to produce abundant food. Animals living in harmony with humans. None of this is fantasy, Bapuji insists; it is the natural condition of the cosmos when souls are aligned and the elements respond to the inner state of the dominant beings on the planet.

Most importantly, the new world will be one in which knowledge of the soul is universal. Children will be taught from infancy who they are, what the supreme is, how to remain in atma swaroop. Schools will integrate spiritual education with material learning, as in the ancient gurukul system. Society will be structured to support inner growth, not to obstruct it.

Bapuji teaches that the children of the infinite who are taking birth now will be the early architects of this new world. They will not see all of it in the present life — most of them — but they will lay the foundation. The seeds being planted in this generation will grow into the trees of the next age. Every soul that turns toward truth now contributes to that emerging world.

PART EIGHT

Practical Spiritual Living

CHAPTER FORTY-FIVE

The Ultimate Purpose of Human Life

What is human life for? Bapuji's answer is unambiguous. Human life is for the realisation of the soul and the return of the soul to its source. Everything else is secondary. Education, career, family, art, service — all of these are settings within which the central work occurs, but none of them is the central work itself.

The shastras have always said this “Manushya janma durlabh se milta hai” (Human birth is attained only with great rarity.) Even devatas long for it because only in human form can the soul earn liberation. Bapuji asks: knowing this, why do most humans use this rare birth to chase exactly the things they could never keep? Money, status, possessions, sensory pleasures — all of these are left at death. Not one item is carried forward. Only the soul's own state is carried.

He teaches that the meaningful question for any human being is: when this body falls, what will the soul carry with it? The answer is: only what has been built within. Sanskars. Karmic recordings. The relationship with the supreme. Soul-power. These are the only luggage of the journey. Everything else stays at customs.

A successful life, in Bapuji's vision, is one in which the soul has done the inner work. The form of the outer life can vary enormously. A king and a beggar can both succeed if their inner state is right; a king and a beggar can both fail if their inner state is wrong. Outer position is not the measure.

Bapuji recommends a practical orientation. Spend at least one or two hours daily in genuine inner work — listening to true knowledge, practicing yog, holding atma swaroop, sending vibrations of param shanti. Reduce time spent on what cannot last. Reduce social obligations that drain energy without serving the soul. Increase company that supports the inner work. Read what nourishes the soul; avoid what disturbs it.

Over time, the priorities of life rearrange themselves. What once seemed urgent loses its urgency. What once seemed unimportant becomes central. The soul takes its proper place at the centre, and outer life arranges itself around it. This is not retreat from the world; it is right relationship to the world.

Bapuji's final teaching on this subject is direct. The Almighty Authority is the great great great great grandfather of every soul. The bond is unbreakable. The soul that turns toward this source receives without limit. The soul that does not turn lives in unnecessary darkness. The choice is offered every day, in every breath. The wise simply make the turn.

pehchaan aur source mein vapsi.”*

soul and the return to its source.”

CHAPTER FORTY-SIX

Preparing for Death Consciously

Bapuji's most practical teaching is also the simplest: prepare for death by living rightly now. Do not wait for old age. Do not wait for illness. Do not wait for the moment when the body begins to fail. By then, the inner foundation is already what it is, and changing it is much harder.

He recommends beginning preparation in childhood. The mother carrying a child in the womb should hear sacred knowledge. The child should be told from infancy that the soul is eternal, that the body is temporary, that the supreme is real and accessible. Bapuji teaches that even in the womb, the soul has memory of its previous life and is partially conscious. What enters the mother's mind reaches the child. Mothers who fill themselves with peace and knowledge raise children with peace and knowledge already encoded.

For adults who did not have such an upbringing, Bapuji says: begin now. Today. The cosmos does not require a perfect history. It requires sincere turning. Begin with knowledge. Listen to true teaching for one hour daily. Begin yog. Sit and connect with the Almighty Authority. Begin atma swaroop. Practice remembering, throughout the day, that you are soul, not body.

Reduce the addictions of mind and body. Bapuji is direct about this. Excessive consumption of food, drink, entertainment, gossip, and screen-time all reinforce the body-identification that makes death difficult. Each indulgence builds the attachment that will pull the soul back. Replacing these with quietness, with knowledge, with yog, builds the opposite — the lightness that makes death easy.

Forgive people who hurt you. Bapuji says holding old grievances at the moment of death drags the soul into a vibration of resentment. Even if the other person never apologised, even if they continue to wrong you, release them inwardly. Send them peace and complete the matter on your end. This is not for their benefit; it is for yours.

Settle as much as possible in your relationships and arrangements. Death often comes suddenly. Last words mean a great deal. People who have lived in clear, kind speech and clear arrangements leave a lighter footprint behind. Family members are spared confusion and pain. The soul, watching from outside the body in those first days, can rest because what was begun has been completed.

Above all, build the central relationship — the one with the Almighty Authority. Bapuji says this is the only relationship that does not end at death. This is the bond that sustains the soul on its onward journey. Every minute spent strengthening this bond is minute that pays back at the moment of departure and beyond.

When the time comes, the soul that has done this preparation departs without struggle. The body falls. Awareness continues. The soul rises naturally toward what it has been remembering. There is no fear. There is no confusion. There is only continuation, in a more refined form, of what was already happening.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“The preparation for death must happen now, not in the final moment.”

CHAPTER FORTY- SEVEN

How to Help a Departed Soul

When a loved one passes, what truly helps them? Bapuji's teaching here is precise and gentle, and it differs from many traditions.

First, do not weep excessively. The soul of the departed remains nearby for days, sometimes much longer. Hearing the loved one's cry causes the soul direct pain. The soul is already going through transition; the addition of grief from below makes the transition harder. Grieve briefly, sincerely and then turn toward what helps.

Second, share knowledge. Play discourses on the soul, on the supreme, on the journey of life after death. The soul of the departed is in a state where it can hear and understand. Words of true knowledge reach it directly. Bapuji says many departed souls are gathered for the first time in their long history to true gyan after death — they could not receive it during life because the body and worldly life distracted them, but in subtle form they can finally listen.

Third, send specific guidance to the soul. Speak directly: 'You are no longer this body. The body has ended its purpose. Move upward. Go to the higher lokas. Remember the Almighty Authority. Do not stay here. We release you with love.' Such direct, kind instruction supports the soul's onward movement. The soul is a soul, not a memory; speak to it as you would to a being still present.

Fourth, do not keep photographs displayed for long periods, especially garlanded photographs that draw attention daily. Bapuji teaches that this constant remembrance pulls the soul back to the home repeatedly. The soul is meant to move on; the photograph keeps it tethered. Keep memory in the heart. Let the displayed image be retired after the immediate period of mourning.

Fifth, do not engage tantriks or ojhas to ask after the departed soul or to drive it away. These methods cause the soul more suffering. If you sense the soul is troubled or trapped, the right response is the same as for any soul: send vibrations of paramshanti, share knowledge, pray for its liberation to a higher state. Force is never the answer.

Sixth, be careful about traditional ceremonies. Bapuji teaches that the original pind dan and tarpan ceremonies were powerful when the Brahmins performing them had genuine inner cultivation. Today, most ceremonies have lost their original force because the performers themselves have not done the work.

There is no harm in performing them as a family observance, but do not believe they substitute for genuine help to the soul. If the family member who passed was a knowledgeable soul, knowledge is the appropriate offering. If they were a simple traditional soul, sincere ceremony combined with knowledge serves them best.

Seventh, work on yourself. The greatest help you can give a departed loved one is to become a soul of light yourself. Your atma swaroop, your yog, your param shanti vibrations — these reach the departed soul as well, supporting its continued journey. To help the dead, become more alive in your own soul.

CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT

Photos, Mourning and Letting the Soul Move On

Bapuji speaks tenderly but firmly about the practices of long mourning. The instinct to keep a photo of the departed, to garland it daily, to speak to it, to maintain a household shrine to the deceased — Bapuji recognises the love behind these practices, but he names their cost.

When a photograph is kept, when prayers are addressed to the photograph, when family members regularly look at it and remember the person, the soul of the departed is repeatedly drawn back to the home. The soul cannot leave because the family is constantly calling it. Bapuji says this is one of the most common reasons souls remain trapped near their old homes for years and even decades. The trap is not deliberate, it is built from love. Six months, perhaps a year — within this time, the family is transitioning, and the soul is also transitioning. After this period, Bapuji counsels: put the photo away. Not because the love has ended. Because the love now must take a different form. Continued attachment serves nothing. Release becomes the next gift of love.

Bapuji has noted with sadness how some families, especially in joint family situations, will keep extensive shrines to ancestors going back many decades. Each generation adds its own photographs. Each adds its own attachments. The collective draw on those souls becomes substantial, and many are unable to leave the home environment for full lifetimes of the family that remembers them.

There is also a subtler problem. Bapuji teaches that the soul whose photograph is constantly remembered begins to develop expectations — that food will be offered, that prayers will be said, that attention will be given. If the family later changes its practices, the soul becomes disturbed. Sometimes such souls then trouble the family — pressing through one of the children, making demands. The original love-arrangement has now turned into an obligation that, if broken, brings consequences.

The wise course, Bapuji teaches, is gentle but clear. Honour the departed in your heart. Speak to them at the time of departure with love and clear release. Maintain remembrance briefly, with respect. Then move on. Trust that the bond of soul does not depend on photographs. Trust that the work of love is best completed by allowing the soul to rise rather than holding it down with too-extensive memorial.

Above all, Bapuji says, treat death as drama — a scene in the great cosmic play. Each soul plays its part for a time. When its part on this stage ends, it moves to another stage. The wise audience appreciates the performance, applauds when the actor exits, and is ready for the next scene. The unwise audience refuses to let the actor leave, and so blocks both the actor and the play.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

CHAPTER FORTY-NINE

Rituals That Help Ancestors

Hindu tradition holds an elaborate system of ancestor-honouring — shraadh, pitra tarpan, pind dan, and the various offerings made in different seasons. Bapuji explains the deeper structure with care.

The original purpose of these ceremonies was real and the original power was substantial. In ancient times, when Brahmins performing the rites had genuine spiritual cultivation, the vibrations they generated reached the ancestor souls and provided them with direct sustenance — not material food, but subtle nourishment, knowledge-energy, and the support of community remembrance.

The ceremonies began in a specific cosmic context. Bapuji teaches that as souls began to descend in power and many died with attachments unresolved, they remained in the lower subtle layers, hungry for the things they had craved in life. Compassionate sages established the shraadh system as a way for the living to feed and bless the dead. This was real help.

Bapuji confirms that ancestors of certain types can indeed be supported through these practices. He has spoken of the moon as a station where some pitra-souls reside before further ascent. Manu Smriti and other texts describe this. Tarpan, sincerely performed, sends vibrations toward such souls.

But Bapuji also teaches what has changed. Most performers today lack the inner cultivation that made the rites powerful. The forms remain; the substance is mostly gone. Offerings of physical food at certain temples or ceremonies do not actually feed the ancestor — gross matter cannot reach the soul. What used to reach the soul was the subtle vibration generated by the genuine Brahmin's tapasya. Without that vibration, the offering is empty.

What works today? Bapuji's prescription is consistent. Knowledge reaches the ancestor most reliably. Play discourses on the soul and the supreme during the days of remembrance. Speak to the ancestor by name and offer them blessings, not requests. Send them vibrations of param shanti. If the family wishes to perform traditional rites, do so with sincerity but understand that the rite itself is supplementary, not primary.

Bapuji has spoken of the right attitude. The ancestor is no longer your father or grandfather in the sense that they were when they had bodies. They are now souls on their own journey. Honour them as souls. Wish them sadgati. Offer them what souls genuinely need:

knowledge of who they are, and connection with the supreme.

If they are knowledgeable souls who have moved to higher lokas, they do not need shraadh from below — they have already what they need. If they are still in the lower subtle layers, what they truly need is help upward. Either way, what reaches them is your inner state, not the form of the ritual.

Bapuji adds a practical note. If a family member specifically asked before death that certain ceremonies be done, the family does well to honour that request as a gesture of respect, even if the ceremony's metaphysical efficacy is reduced today. Honouring the wishes of the departed is itself a form of love. But do not believe ritual alone replaces inner work. Both should accompany each other.

CHAPTER FIFTY

False Gurus and Modern Distortions

Bapuji speaks frankly about the proliferation of false teachers in this age. He does not name individuals, but he describes patterns that the discerning seeker can recognise.

There are gurus today, he says, who command vast followings, hold immense wealth, claim great spiritual attainment, and yet their inner state is hollow. Many own dozens of vehicles, multiple residences, private aircraft. Their public teaching emphasises stress relief, group ecstasy, dance and music, perhaps light meditation. None of it leads upward in the way real liberation requires.

How do they gather such followings? Bapuji's answer is direct. They are supported by subtle world groups whose members have desires of their own — for attention, for celebration, for the chance to enter human bodies again through influence. These subtle groups push followers toward certain teachers because the activities the teacher arranges allow the subtle souls to act through the followers. Group meditations that turn into mass dancing, ecstatic states that follow group rituals, channelling sessions where 'angels' enter and dance through participants — Bapuji has witnessed and described all of these. They are not holy. They are mass possession.

Bapuji recounts his own observation of a Delhi event led by a foreign teacher who supposedly invoked angels. Fifty serious-looking adults stood in a circle. The teacher invoked. Within minutes all fifty were dancing wildly, having lost their original identity entirely. They did not recognise themselves. The teacher claimed this was angel contact and stress release. Bapuji recognised it for what it was: ghosts entering bodies that the participants had voluntarily emptied of self-awareness. After the event, the participants had no awareness of what had happened.

Bapuji teaches that this kind of teaching has spread widely in our age. It appears in many cultures, under many names. Stress relief through group ecstasy. Healing through invoked spirits. Awakening through chemical-assisted ceremonies. The patterns differ; the underlying mechanism is the same. The participant gives up self-awareness. Subtle entities enter. Effects appear that look spiritual but lead nowhere upward.

There is also the modern fashion of chakra activation and kundalini awakening without proper foundation. Bapuji teaches: chakras open naturally when the soul has built genuine power through gyan and yog. Trying to force them open without that foundation can cause damage — physical, mental, and karmic. The soul that does not yet know itself should not be manipulating its energy centres.

Bapuji has also commented on the modern phenomenon of distance healing — circles where one person, often through WhatsApp groups or video calls, claims to send healing vibrations to many others. He says plainly: this does not work the way it is advertised. A person whose own soul is not yet pure cannot transmit purity to others. What is in fact transmitted, in many such cases, is the sender's own residual negativity, dressed in spiritual language. The receiver feels something — sometimes positive at first because of the placebo of expectation, sometimes uneasy later when the actual energetic content settles in. Genuine healing requires the healer to be a soul of high power, in regular yog, working under the supervision of the supreme. Such healers exist but are rare; most who claim it are not.

Bapuji has known seekers in his own life who told him about gurus owning a hundred Mercedes, private aircraft, lavish residences in multiple countries — while preaching detachment to followers who lived simply. The contradiction itself is the test. A teacher whose life style flatly contradicts their words has demonstrated which they actually believe in. Wealth itself is not the marker; many genuine sages have moved among kings. The marker is whether the lifestyle speaks of attachment or freedom.

How does the seeker recognise a true teacher? Bapuji's tests are simple. Does the teacher emphasise the soul's own self-realisation, or do they make the seeker dependent on themselves? Do they teach the soul to connect directly with the Almighty Authority, or do they place themselves in between? Do they live simply, with their wealth and lifestyle reflecting their teaching, or do they live in opulence that contradicts their words? Do they speak of the wider truth of creation and the supreme — or only of localised devotion to one form?

The true teacher points the seeker beyond the teacher, toward the supreme directly. The false teacher points the seeker toward the teacher's own greatness. The first sign of falseness is the building up of the teacher; the first sign of truth is the dissolution of the teacher into the source they all share.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Sachha guru tumhe atma se parmatma tak le jaaye, apne tak rok kar nahi.”

CHAPTER FIFTY-ONE

Spiritual Discipline

Bapuji's prescription for the daily discipline of liberation is grounded and practical. It does not require renunciation of family or career. It requires the steady turning of attention, every day, in the direction of the soul.

First, knowledge. Listen to true teaching for at least one hour daily. Bapuji has himself recorded thousands of hours of discourse. Other genuine teachers exist. Find what speaks to your soul and return to it daily. Knowledge is the foundation. Without it, practice has no direction.

Second, yog. Spend at least one hour daily in connection with the Almighty Authority. Sit comfortably. Establish atma swaroop. Remember the supreme as great great great great grandfather. Feel the bond. Allow the param prakash to flow. Bapuji teaches that this hour, given consistently, transforms the soul over months and years more powerfully than any other practice.

Third, karm yog throughout the day. Do every action in the awareness of being soul. Eat as soul. Walk as soul. Work as soul. Speak as soul. Bapuji teaches that this practice — atma swaroop maintained through ordinary activity — is what allows the inner state to become continuous rather than confined to the meditation hour.

Fourth, mann ka maun. The silence of mind. Bapuji teaches this as a powerful practice for the present age. Speak less. When speaking is necessary, speak briefly, kindly, slowly, with awareness. The energy that would have been spent in speech is then available for inner work. Many find that silence sustained for some weeks, produces visible inner shifts.

Fifth, biti so bidi — let what is past be past. Do not hold grievances. Do not relive injuries. Each morning, treat the day as new. The night and the day were given precisely for this purpose, Bapuji says — so that the soul could begin fresh each morning. The practice of release is daily.

Sixth, send vibrations of paramshanti. Throughout the day, in moments of pause, mentally send the vibration of supreme peace. Repeat 'param shanti, param shanti' inwardly. This radiates into the surroundings, supporting both your own inner state and the field around you. The Paramshanti Maha chant is one of the great practical gifts of this age.

Seventh, reduce. Reduce screen-time, social obligations that drain rather than nourish, foods that cloud the mind, drinks that dull awareness, company that disturbs peace. The point is not asceticism. The point is making space for the soul. Where there is too much consumption, there is no room for inner growth.

Eighth, increase. Increase pure company, sacred reading, time alone in nature, conscious eating, conscious sleeping. Where these increase, the soul begins to reveal itself.

Bapuji says that the seeker who follows even half of this discipline consistently will see substantial transformation within a few months. The full discipline produces transformation rapidly. The cosmic acceleration of the present age supports the seeker. What once took years of cave-dwelling can now be accomplished by a sincere householder who maintains the discipline at home. The doorway is unusually open. The seeker need only walk through.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Roz ek ghanta gyan, ek ghanta yog, baaki kal mein swaroop — yahi marg hai.”

“One hour of knowledge daily, one hour of yog, the rest in atma swaroop — this is the path.”

CHAPTER FIFTY-TWO

Paramshanti Vibration

Bapuji teaches two practices as particularly suited to the present age. Both are simple, both are powerful, and both can be integrated into ordinary life.

The first is the Param Shanti vibration. The mind, throughout the day, repeats inwardly the words 'param shanti, param shanti' — supreme peace, supreme peace. This is not mantra in the sense of magical formula. It is reminder. It is broadcasting. It is the soul setting its intent and letting that intent radiate outward into the field.

Why does this work? Bapuji explains: when the words are repeated with awareness, the soul aligns with the meaning. The vibration of supreme peace is generated within. From there it spreads outward — into the body, into the immediate atmosphere, into the home, into the surroundings. The space changes. People near the practitioner feel different without knowing why. Mood lightens. Tensions ease. The chemistry of the environment shifts.

Bapuji teaches that the Paramshanti chanting is uniquely effective in this age because the present atmosphere of earth is so saturated with negative vibrations. To inject pure vibrations consistently is itself a spiritual discipline. Each soul that radiates paramshanti contributes to the great purification underway. Even souls that do nothing else but this single practice contribute meaningfully.

The second practice is mann ka maun — silence of the mind. This is more subtle than verbal silence. The seeker may speak, when necessary, but in between, the mind itself is held in silence. No restless thinking. No replaying conversations. No future-planning loops. Just stillness.

How is this achieved? Bapuji teaches that mann ka maun begins with awareness. Notice when the mind is making noise. Notice that this noise is not who you are. Step back into soul consciousness (atma-swaroop) . The soul, witnessing the mind, is already silent. As the soul re-establishes its presence, the mind quiets. Practiced over weeks, mann ka maun produces remarkable effects.

The constant inner chatter drops. Energy that was leaking through ceaseless thought is now available. Sankalpa-power increases — the soul's resolves become effective because they are no longer drowned in mental noise. Bapuji says many practitioners report that their wishes begin to manifest quickly, not because the universe is granting wishes, but because the soul, finally silent, is finally projecting clearly.

Together, these two practices form a beautiful pair. Paramshanti vibration sends pure energy outward. mann ka maun keeps the inner field clear so the energy can flow. The seeker who maintains both becomes a steady broadcaster of supreme peace, a quiet centre in the storm of kalyug, a small but real point of the new world emerging within the present world.

Bapuji has often said that if every reader of his teachings practiced just these two — param shanti vibration and mann ka maun — the atmosphere of the entire planet would shift visibly within a few years. The soul's contribution to global transformation is not abstract. It is precisely as real as the vibrations the soul radiates. Each soul that turns toward the supreme adds its small light to the gathering dawn.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Param shanti boli, sochi, jeeyi — ant mein wahi atma ka swabhav ban jaata hai.”

“Spoken, thought, lived — supreme peace eventually becomes the soul's own nature.”

CHAPTER FIFTY- THREE

Fear of Death to Eternity

We come to the end of this book. Bapuji's teachings on life after death have unfolded across many chapters, across many lokas, across the immense scale of cosmic time. What has been the heart of all of it?

The heart, Bapuji teaches, is this: the soul is eternal. It does not die. It cannot die in the ordinary dissolutions of the cosmos. It can be lost only in the deepest cosmic fire and only when it has not turned toward its source. The soul that turns toward the supreme is safe forever, regardless of what bodies it wears, what worlds it travels, what dissolutions it lives through. That soul has found itself.

From this knowledge, the fear of death dissolves. Not in theory. Not in argument. In actual lived experience. The soul that has spent enough time in atma swaroop, that has connected enough with the Almighty Authority, that has practiced param shanti vibrations long enough — that soul no longer fears the body's end. The soul knows it is not the body. The soul knows where it is going. The soul knows that what it loved most will not be lost, because the deepest love it discovered was love for the supreme, and the supreme is what awaits.

Bapuji often says that for a true gyani, the day of departure should be celebrated like the day of birth. Both are doorways. Birth opens the door into this body and this lifetime. Death opens the door into the next stage of the soul's journey. Both should be greeted with awareness, with grace, with the readiness to begin what comes next. The fear surrounding death exists only because the soul has been told nothing about what is on the other side. Once the soul knows, fear has nothing left to grip.

There is a profound joy hidden in this knowledge. The joy of knowing that no soul ever truly loses anyone. The forms are exchanged, but the soul-bonds continue across lifetimes. Every meeting now is a continuation of meetings before. Every parting is itself a meeting still in motion. Looked at from the soul's level, life and death are simply phases of an unbroken being.

Bapuji's wish for every reader is the realisation of this knowledge — not as concept but as direct experience. Begin with knowledge. Practice yog. Hold soul- consciousness through the day. Send vibrations of paramshanti. Let go of attachment, gradually, as you are able. Connect with the great great great great grandfather of every soul. The bond is real and it is eternal.

If you do this work, when your day of departure arrives — and arrive it will, for all of us — you will find yourself ready. The body will fall. Awareness will continue. The soul will rise. And the journey home, which began many lives ago, will reach the next great threshold.

This is Bapuji's teaching, gathered as faithfully as possible from his discourses. It is offered now to you, with deep respect, with the wish that your own journey be supported by what these pages have transmitted. May you know yourself as soul. May you find your way home. May param shanti accompany every step.

Param shanti.

Bapuji Insights

Throughout the chapters of this book, certain lines from Bapuji's discourses are placed as insights — short, powerful pointers to the heart of the teaching. The insights from across all chapters are collected here in one place for the reader's contemplation and reflection.

Insight 1

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Aatma ka vinaash nahi hota; sirf shareer chhoot jaata hai.”

“The soul is never destroyed; only the body is left behind.”

Insight 2

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Aap shareer nahi hain, aap atma hain — ek chaitanya shakti.”

“You are not the body. You are the soul — a point of conscious energy.”

Insight 3

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mrityu ek dwar hai, ant nahi.”

“Death is a doorway, not an ending.”

Insight 4

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Ant mati so gati — antim soch hi atma ki agli yatra tay karti hai.”

“As is the final state of mind, so is the soul's next journey — the last thought decides.”

Insight 5

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma ki sthiti se hi uski oonchaai tay hoti hai.”

“The soul's height is determined by its inner state.”

Insight 6

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Karan sharir mein anek janmon ka hisaab hai; gyan aur yog se yeh saaf hota hai.”

“The causal body holds the account of many lives; only knowledge and yog can clear it.”

Insight 7

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Apna bhagya khud apni karm se banta hai; koi aur nahi likhta.”

“Each soul writes its own destiny through its own karma; no one else writes it.”

Insight 8

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Hum jo bhi sochte hain wahi vaayumandal mein phailta hai.”

“Whatever we think spreads into the atmosphere — thought itself colours the whole of life.”

Insight 9

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Jab tak moh hai, atma laut-laut kar dharti par aati hai.”

“As long as attachment remains, the soul returns again and again to earth.”

Insight 10

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Bhoot pret atma ki vasna ke bhukhe hote hain; gyan aur prakash hi sachhi raksha hai.”

“Restless souls hunger for unsatisfied desires; only knowledge and inner light protect.”

Insight 11

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma ko zabardasti se nahi, gyan aur shanti se mukti milti hai.”

“The soul finds release not through force, but through knowledge and peace.”

Insight 12

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Manushya janm devta bhi mangte hain — yeh durlabh awsar hai.”

“Even devas long for human birth — it is the rarest of opportunities.”

Insight 13

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Madhyam dwara baat karne se atma ki mukti nahi hoti.”

“Talking through mediums does not liberate the soul.”

Insight 14

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Bhoot bhi atmaayein hain — unhe gyan chahiye, dushmani nahi.”

“Ghosts too are souls — they need knowledge, not enmity.”

Insight 15

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Shareer to ek vaahan tha; usse mukt karna hi atma ki sahaayata hai.”

“The body was only a vehicle; releasing it is the truest help to the soul.”

Insight 16

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mritak ko vidaayi do — gyan suno, prarthna karo, fir use jaane do.”

“Give the departed a true farewell — share knowledge, pray, and let them go.”

Insight 17

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Drug se jhalak milti hai, magar yog se yatra milti hai.”

“Drugs may give a glimpse, but only yog gives the actual journey.”

Insight 18

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Pichhle janmon ki yaad nahi, abhi ki jagriti mukti deti hai.”

“Not memory of past lives but awakening in this life is what liberates.”

Insight 19

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma shareer chhodne se nahi, swaroop pehchaanne se mukt hoti hai.”

“The soul is freed not by leaving the body, but by recognising its true self.”

Insight 20

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mrityu ki ek jhalak bhi atma ko sada ke liye badal sakti hai.”

“Even one glimpse of death can change the soul forever.”

Insight 21

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mrityu pehle nahi thi; jab moh badha tab uska sarjan hua.”

“Death did not exist at first; it was created when attachment grew too heavy.”

Insight 22

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma ki pehchan uska gyan hai — jo gyan sune wahi uski katagori bataata hai.”

“A soul is recognised by the knowledge it accepts — what it absorbs reveals its category.”

Insight 23

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Brahma ka ek din hi aath arab chausath crore saal ka hai.”

“Even one day of Brahma is 8 arab 64 crore years — through all of this the soul has been travelling.”

Insight 24

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Pralay anek hai, magar mahakal pralay mein hi atma ka antim swaroop ka prashn aata hai.”

“There are many dissolutions — but only in mahakal pralay does the very being of the soul come into question.”

Insight 25

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Atma vaise to amar hai, par mahakal pralay mein vinasht ho sakti hai — gyan hi raksha hai.”

“The soul is ordinarily eternal, but in mahakal pralay it can be destroyed — only knowledge protects.”

Insight 26

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Black hole bhi paap ka antim parinaam hai — atma ke andar bhi yahi niyam chalta hai.”

“A black hole is the final residue of accumulated darkness — the same law operates within the soul.”

Insight 27

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Paramdham hi atma ka asli ghar hai — wahan jaane ke liye sirf prakash chahiye.”

“Paramdham is the soul's original home — to reach it, only inner light is needed.”

Insight 28

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Sukh chahiye to vaikunth, shanti chahiye to shivpuri, param shanti chahiye to paramdham.”

“For bliss go to Vaikunth, for peace go to Shivpuri, for supreme peace go to Paramdham.”

Insight 29

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Bhakti ka phal gyan hai, gyan ka phal Jeevan Mukti.”

“The fruit of devotion is knowledge; the fruit of knowledge is Jeevan Mukti.”

Insight 30

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Kundalini se pehle gyan, gyan se yog, yog se atma swaroop ki anubhuti.”

“Knowledge first, then yog, then through yog the realisation of the soul.”

Insight 31

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Karmatit, bhavatit, gunatit — yahi Jeevan Mukti ki teen seediyaan hain.”

“Beyond karma, beyond emotion, beyond the gunas — the three steps of liberation while alive.”

Insight 32

“Brahmgyani ek pal mein paramdham pahunch sakti hai — jab ahankar mit jaye.”

“The brahmgyani can reach paramdham in a single moment — when ego has dissolved.”

Insight 33

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Paramdham tak pahunchne mein kai rok hain; gyan aur yog se hi raah khulti hai.”

“Many obstacles stand on the way to paramdham; only knowledge and yog clear the path.”

Insight 34

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Bina gyan ke yog adhura hai, bina yog ke gyan adhura hai.”

“Without knowledge, yog is incomplete; without yog, knowledge is incomplete.”

Insight 35

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Yog maana atma ka parmatma se kanekshan — yahi sabse uchcha karya hai.”

“Yog means the soul's connection with the supreme — this is the highest of all activities.”

Insight 36

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mahashiv ka ek rom-rom mein ek brahmand basta hai — atma usi mein samaati hai.”

“One pore of Mahashiva holds one entire brahmand — and the soul rests in that source.”

Insight 37

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Eyliyens hai, magar atma ka asli vahan param prakash hai.”

“Aliens exist, but the soul's true vehicle is param prakash itself.”

Insight 38

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Bramand, galaxy, universe — har lok mein atma hai, har jagah Shiv hai.”

“Brahmand, galaxy, universe — souls dwell in every realm, and Shiva is present everywhere.”

Insight 39

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“108, 16000, 9 lakh — anant ki santaanen abhi dharti par utar rahi hain.”

“108, 16,000, 9 lakh — the children of the infinite are descending to earth right now.”

Insight 40

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Kalyug ki kala mein bhi parivartan ki kala chhupi hai.”

“Within the darkness of kalyug hides the art of transformation.”

Insight 41

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Kayamat ka din nahi, naye yug ka aagman hai.”

“It is not a day of doom but the dawn of a new age.”

Insight 42

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Naya yug 100 kala ka hoga — har atma poori shakti se chamkegi.”

“The new age will be of 100 kala — every soul will shine in its full power.”

Insight 43

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Maha parivartan aa raha hai — atma ko abhi taiyaar karo.”

“The great transformation is coming — prepare the soul now.”

Insight 44

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Anant ki santaanen kaam ke liye nahi, hone ke liye dharti par aayi hain.”

“The children of the infinite have come not to do, but to be — that is itself their work.”

Insight 45

“Manushya janm ka maksad hai atma ki swaroop pehchaan aur source mein vapsi.”

“The purpose of human life is the recognition of soul and the return to its source.”

Insight 46

“Mrityu ki taiyari abhi karni hoti hai, antim pal mein nahi.”

“The preparation for death must happen now, not in the final moment.”

Insight 47

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mritak ko sahaayata gyan aur shanti se hi milti hai — aansoo se nahi.”

“The departed are helped by knowledge and peace — never by tears.”

Insight 48

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mohonki yaad atma ko bandh leti hai; pyaar ki sachi seva hai use jaane dena.”

“Remembrance from attachment binds the soul; the truest love is to let it go.”

Insight 49

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Pitra ko vastu nahi, atma ko prakash chahiye.”

“Ancestors do not need objects but light for the soul.”

Insight 50

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Sachha guru tumhe atma se parmatma tak le jaaye, apne tak rok kar nahi.”

“The true guru leads you from soul to the supreme, never holding you at himself.”

Insight 51

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Roz ek ghanta gyan, ek ghanta yog, baaki kal mein swaroop — yahi marg hai.”

“One hour of knowledge daily, one hour of yog, the rest in atma swaroop — this is the path.”

Insight 52

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Param shanti boli, sochi, jeeyi — ant mein wahi atma ka swabhav ban jaata hai.”

“Spoken, thought, lived — supreme peace eventually becomes the soul's own nature.”

Insight 53

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mrityu ka dar tab tak hai jab tak atma ka swaroop nahi jaana.”

“The fear of death lasts only until the soul knows itself.”

Glossary

The terms listed here are drawn from Bapuji's spiritual vocabulary as preserved across all the books of this series. Definitions are kept simple and beginner-friendly, so that any reader, however new to this knowledge, can follow the journey of the soul with clarity.

84 Lakh Yonis — The vast number of life-form categories through which souls travel in the cycle of birth and rebirth.

Aant Mati So Gati — The traditional principle that the final state of mind at the time of death determines the soul's next destination.

Ajar Amar Avinashi — Never-aging, immortal, indestructible. The three-fold quality of the eternal soul.

Akari — A subtle form, not a physical body. When a soul makes affirmations and loses energy, it descends from divine light into a subtle form made of supreme elements.

Akashic Record — The cosmic recording of all thoughts and actions, stored in the akash tatva (ether element). Spreads outward from the doer through every layer of the cosmos.

Almighty Authority / Behad Ka Baap — The Supreme Father; the source of all souls in all multiverses; resides in unch te unch paramdham, beyond every multiverse.

Ardh Pralay — Partial dissolution; periodic cosmic clearing of accumulated negativity from earth. Souls themselves are not destroyed.

Atma — The soul; a point of conscious energy. The true self. We are not body but soul. In its original state, the pure soul is in divine light form.

Atma Swaroop — The state of abiding in the awareness of being soul, not body. The foundation of all genuine yog.

Avatar / Incarnation — A cell of a supreme soul or higher-dimensional soul, taken into earthly body to carry out specific divine work.

Avyakt — The invisible subtle and supreme subtle world of creation.

Behad Gyan — The supreme knowledge about the Almighty Authority and the boundless creation. The ultimate knowledge from beginning to end of vast creation, beyond what is written in any scripture.

Behad ka Baap — The Supreme Father; the master creator of the limitless creation. The unique, ultimate source of all power. Almighty Authority.

Behad ki Atma — Souls of supreme light and supreme great element. Very powerful souls; behad souls.

Behad ki Duniya — The boundless, limitless creation. Beyond multiverses, beyond great universes — the infinite kala creation whose size and power are immeasurable.

Behad ki Kala ka Paramdham — The supreme abode of the highest dimension of creation, the abode of Almighty Authority. Power is infinite and inestimable.

Behad ki Mukti — Supreme liberation given by Behad Ka Baap, in which infinite souls are dissolved peacefully into supreme light in a single moment, without any pain.

Bermuda Triangle — A region of earth where the upper subtle layer (around 2000 km above) holds an opening through which alien craft pull down ships and aircraft.

Bhakti Marg — The path of devotion — surrendering to one's Ishta Dev through worship, fasting, chanting, and ritual.

Bhavatit — Beyond all feelings and emotions.

Bhulok — The earth realm — the lowest dimension within a brahmand.

Bhuvarlok — The second loka, immediately above earth, where many departed souls reside while still attached to earthly conditions.

Brahmand — Solar system.

Brahmapuri / Sat Lok — The seventh loka, the abode of Brahma; the highest level still within the gravitational reach of the sun. Souls reaching here can still fall back if attachment remains.

Brahmgyani — One who has known brahm — the formless absolute. The brahmgyani's path is the most direct, traversing to paramdham as a bindu of pure consciousness.

Causal world (Karan Jagat) — World of supreme subtle elements; finer than the subtle world. The realm of the deepest karmic record.

Chaitanya Shakti — Conscious energy. The soul's essential nature. A point of conscious light.

Children of the Infinite — The 108, 16,000, and 9 lakh souls sent by the Almighty Authority to earth in the present age to anchor the great transformation.

Dharana — The final stage of practice, when through regular Behad Gyan and yog, the soul transforms its sanskars and realises its pure incorporeal soul-conscious state.

Divya Drishti — Divine vision; the inner sight of subtle realities, opened in advanced yogis through the awakening of the agya chakra.

Gunatit / Nirgun — Beyond the qualities of nature — sattva, rajas, and tamas. The pure soul-conscious or incorporeal state.

Guru — A spiritual instructor who shows the soul the path from darkness to enlightenment.

Gyan Marg — The path of knowledge — the soul continually contemplates the supreme knowledge until it realises its destination.

Had ki Atma — Common souls created at lower levels of a solar system, with low power, constituted of subtle elements but lacking supreme light.

Ichcha Mrityu — Death by one's own resolve, without external compulsion. The original form of human exit from the body, available to early souls before the institution of yamraj-driven death.

Ishta Dev — One's chosen deity in the path of devotion.

Ishwar — The master or owner of creation; incorporeal Shiv.

Jeev — When souls fall to lower levels and live in physical bodies due to uncontrolled desires, they are called jeev.

Jeevan Mukti — Living liberation; freedom from all karmic accounts while remaining eternally with the creator in blissful state.

Jyotirling — A column of pure formless light. Distinct from shivling (the form-based representation). The brahmgyani enters jyotirling to merge with formless brahm and travel directly to paramdham.

Kal Agni — The fire of time, generated by Shiva entering the sun in Mahakal Pralay. Unlike ordinary fire, kal agni can dissolve souls themselves.

Kala — A unit of measurement of soul power. Just as electrical power is measured in watts, soul power is measured in kala. Higher kala means a more powerful soul or creator.

Kalp Pralay — The dissolution at the end of one day of Brahma. Three lokas — bhulok, bhuvarlok, swarglok — are dissolved by the heat of twelve suns generated by Vishnu. Higher loka souls are preserved.

Karan Sharir — The causal body, made of ether element only; storehouse of the karmic accounts of a soul. Cleansing the karan sharir is essential for spiritual progress.

Karmatit — Beyond karmic bondage; the soul has freedom from all karmic accounts.

Kayamat ka Din — Day of judgment in some traditions; in Bapuji's teaching, the moment of cosmic transformation rather than punishment — the dawn of the new age.

Loka — A layer or dimension of creation. Bhulok (earth), Bhuvarlok, Swarglok, Maharlok, Janlok, and so on are layers of creation within a brahmand.

Maha Brahmand — Galaxy.

Maha Mahakal Pralay — The greatest dissolution, in which countless brahmans are absorbed by Mahashiva back into every pore of his being.

Maha Paramdham — The supreme abode of a galaxy, the residence of Maha Shiva.

Maha Parivartan — The great transformation; the resetting of the cosmic clock from kalyug to a new satyug, anchored by the Almighty Authority's present cosmic intervention.

Mahakal Pralay — The great dissolution at the end of Brahma's hundred years. Shiva enters the sun and creates kal agni; the entire brahmand burns; even souls accumulated with paap can perish.

Maharlok, Janlok, Taplok — The fourth, fifth, and sixth lokas above earth, inhabited by rishis and high-quality souls who have moved beyond ordinary attachment.

Mann Ka Maun — Silence of mind — keeping the inner mental field still even while engaged in necessary speech and action.

Manvantara — A unit of cosmic time; seventy-one yugantar form one manvantara; fourteen manvantars form one kalp (one day of Brahma).

Mukti — Liberation; the stage when the soul no longer exists in creation as a separate entity but dissolves into its creator.

Nirakari — The formless state of a soul; the true incorporeal divine light form. The ultimate stage of a soul.

Param Maha Brahmand — Universe.

Param Maha tattva — The supreme great element; the radiance around Param Prakash. The highest element-level energy after Param Prakash itself.

Param Prakash — Supreme divine light; the energy of a soul in its incorporeal form. The pure state of soul consciousness.

Param Prakash — Supreme divine light; the energy of the Almighty Authority and the original light of the pure soul. The speed of param prakash is many crore times the speed of physical light.

Param Purush — Akari Shiv or Maha Shiv. The first creation of the incorporeal supreme creator in any creation, with maximum energy next to incorporeal supreme soul.

Param Purush — The original beings whose bodies were of supreme element, created at the beginning of this brahmand. As the cycles progressed, they descended into devata and human forms.

Param Shanti Maha Mantra — The mantra of supreme peace — the inner repetition of 'param shanti' that aligns the soul with its source and radiates pure vibration into the surrounding atmosphere.

Param tattva — Supreme element. Just as the nucleus is finer than the atom, paramtattva is finer than tattva. Its energy is far higher than ordinary tattva.

Paramatma — The supreme soul; the creator of souls. A soul in its true formless light form has the power to create many souls through affirmation — that creator state is called Paramatma.

Paramdham — The supreme abode; the highest dimension of a creation, where the creator (Shiva, Maha Shiva, etc.) resides. An incorporeal world of supreme divine light.

Paramshanti — Supreme peace — the original state of the soul when first created. The soul always seeks Paramshanti because that is its true nature.

Parardh — Half of Brahma's life — fifty years of Brahma. The first parardh of the present Brahma is complete; we are within the second parardh.

Patal Lok — The seven lokas below earth — realms of asuric and tamasic forces, where souls of heavy negative karma find themselves drawn.

Peedi — Generation of creators or supreme souls. Higher peedi means higher dimension and greater power.

Pralay — Dissolution of a creation. There are stages: Ardh Pralay, Pralay, Kalp Pralay, Mahakal Pralay, and Maha Mahakal Pralay.

Puranas — Hindu literature describing ancient wisdom and the history of creation through stories.

Purusharth — Spiritual effort made by a human being to understand soul science through self-enquiry and meditation.

Roop — A clone of a soul created by a supreme soul through its own energy and affirmation. Creating a roop reduces the original power of the supreme soul.

Sakari — A physical, gross form. When the energy of a soul further degenerates, it acquires a sakari body of five elements.

Sanatan Dharm — The eternal religion that has existed since the beginning of creation and will always exist; the religion of the soul itself.

Sankalp — Affirmation; the determination or thought generated in a soul. Mind power is the power of soul. Higher kala produces stronger sankalp shakti.

Sankalp Shakti — The power of pure resolve. A soul in deep yog and atma swaroop can generate sankalps that travel through the cosmos to paramdham itself.

Sanskars — The character of a soul, recorded in its causal body. The mind of a soul works according to its sanskars.

Saptarshis — The seven great rishis from whom the lokas were originally founded. Their resolves shaped the structure of the cosmos.

Seva — Selfless service. In Behad Gyan, the highest seva is sharing the supreme knowledge for the benefit of souls.

Shakti — Divine female counterpart of Shiv in creation. Akari Shakti emerges from Akari Shiv to assist in furthering creation.

Shastra — Hindu scripture in which spiritual matters are discussed.

Shiv / Maha Shiv / Param Maha Shiv — Incorporeal creators. Shiva creates a solar system; Maha Shiva creates a galaxy; Param Maha Shiva creates a universe.

Shivpuri — The realm above Vaikunth, abode of Shiva-Shakti, where deep peace replaces bliss as the soul's experience.

Shraadh — The system of ancestor-honouring rites in Hindu tradition, performed at specific times of year, intended to support the souls of departed ancestors.

Sthool Sharir — The gross physical body, made of all five elements. Returned to the elements at death.

Subtle world (Sukshm Jagat) — World of subtle elements; the dimension immediately above the physical earth where most departed souls go.

Sukshma Sharir — The subtle body, made of three elements — ether, air, and fire. After death, the soul moves through the subtle worlds in this body.

Swarglok — The realm of light or heaven, where deities and high-quality souls dwell.

Tarpan / Pind Dan — Traditional Hindu offerings to ancestor souls. Originally powerful when performed by Brahmins of genuine inner cultivation; today their efficacy depends on the inner state of the performer and is best supplemented with knowledge.

Tattva — Element. The visible world is made of five elements — earth, water, fire, air, and ether. Tattva is finer than the chemical elements of science.

Vikarm — Sin committed by a soul.

Vishnulok / Vaikunth — The realm above Brahmapuri, abode of Vishnu, where souls experience atindriya sukh — supreme bliss beyond the senses. A soul reaching Vaikunth does not return to earth.

Vyakt — The visible, five-element world of creation.

Yamraj — The deity who oversees the departure of souls from the body when the natural lifespan ends. According to Bapuji, Yamraj's role began only after souls fell into denser bodies; in earlier ages it was not needed.

Yog — Inner connection with the Almighty Authority. After acquiring Behad Gyan, the soul immerses in deep love for its creator and forgets the physical world — that stage is yog.

Yugantar — One full cycle of the four yugas — satyug, treta, dwapar, kalyug — totalling approximately 43 lakh 20,000 years.

Yugas — The four ages of time on earth: Satyug, Tretayug, Dwaparyug, and Kalyug. Together they form one chaturyug, which repeats until kalp pralay.

“Gyan Daan Maha Daan”

Sharing Knowledge is the Highest Charity

— Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

What truly happens after death?
Where does the soul go when the body falls silent?
Does consciousness survive beyond the physical world?

Based on the profound spiritual revelations of Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, this book explores the hidden journey of the soul beyond the body — through subtle worlds, karmic dimensions, higher lokas, and the eternal search for Paramdham.

Discover the mysteries of the subtle body,
the law of karma after death,
rebirth, trapped souls, near-death experiences, akashic records, higher cosmic realms, and the soul's ultimate return journey.

Blending ancient spiritual wisdom with deep cosmic insight, this book transforms death from a fear into a doorway toward eternal consciousness.

A profound spiritual exploration for every soul seeking the truth beyond life.

*“Death is not the end of the soul.
Only the body is left behind.”*

— Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

“Death did not exist at first; it was created when attachment grew too heavy.”

— Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel
