ABOUT BAPUJI

Bapuji (full name: Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly called “Dadaji” by the younger generation) was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. He spent his childhood in another nearby village named Ambasan, also located in the Mehsana district.

In the early part of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realising the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers who wish to realise their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned

God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy, he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law (LLB) degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, he established a spiritual institution called Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world — filled with suffering and disorder — into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt.

Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as “Maa,” worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to eighteen hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realised through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of superconsciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji’s teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the soul, the science of meditation, the highest state of supreme peace (Paramshanti), the journey of the soul, and the path of return to the original source. His knowledge is supremely profound, and is intended for sincere seekers who genuinely wish to awaken to their true nature.

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

PREFACE

“Gyan Daan Maha Daan”

(Sharing Knowledge is the Highest Charity) Share to the maximum extent with all.

— by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

The world has become loud. Minds have become heavier. Sleep has become broken. Hearts have become tired. And in the middle of all this noise, something inside us keeps whispering, There must be another way to live. There must be a deeper calm. And peace that does not depend on situations changing. That whisper is the soul and the answer to that whisper is Paramshanti -supreme peace.

The teachings in these pages come from the discourses of Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, founder of Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay. Bapuji has spent a lifetime in deep meditation, in samadhi, and in service. From that silence, he has given the world a path — a way of meditating that is not just calming, but transforming. It is simple enough for an absolute beginner, and yet deep enough for a lifelong practitioner. It does not demand belief. It only invites practice.

THE ART OF MEDITATION

The chapters that follow have been drawn from the daily guidance of Sakshi Patel, who carries Bapuji's meditation work forward through the Paramshanti Motivation & Meditation YouTube channel. With more than fifteen years of personal practice, she speaks as someone who has walked the path. Her voice is patient. Her words are clear. And her one wish is that every reader, every listener, every seeker — should taste, even for a few moments, the peace that lives within them.

This book is meant to be read slowly. It is meant to sit beside your daily practice — not replace it, but support it. The real meditation is the one you do, not the one you read about. So as you turn these pages, please also turn inward. Sit. Close your eyes. Try. Even five minutes a day will begin to shift something — quietly, patiently, surely.

May this book be useful to you. May it bring you home to yourself. And may the supreme peace that Bapuji speaks of become, slowly, your own. This book is a quiet offering to every soul who has ever sat down, closed their eyes, and wondered why peace seems so far away.

CHAPTER ONE

The Need for Meditation Today

Stress has quietly become the background music of modern life. Anxiety follows us into our homes, into our beds, into our mornings. Sleep is broken, the mind never stops running, the body carries a tiredness that no holiday seems to fix. Children, adults, working people, retired people — almost everyone is searching for the same thing, Peace.

Earlier, meditation was a choice. Today it is a necessity. The way we live now has rapidly emptied us out — fast pace, constant noise, endless notifications and very little stillness. The world has become heavier and unkind and so have our minds. So we begin to ask the question that has always been there: how do I quiet myself? How do I rest? How do I find calm?

This is why meditation is rising. The soul is tired and every soul is seeking permanent happiness and peace. The restlessness, depression, feeling of incompleteness is driving, encouraging many to start meditation.

But the real challenge is not finding meditation. The real challenge is doing it. Most people start. Most people stop. Two days of effort, then three days of avoidance, and the practice slips away. We carry stress, we carry sadness, we carry the weight of yesterday and the worry of tomorrow — and still we cannot sit for ten minutes with ourselves. The mind keeps running endlessly.

Bapuji has called this the central problem of our time. The world is suffering not because outer situations are bad alone — it is suffering because the inner state of human beings has become disturbed. And the only real solution, he says, is to turn inward. To meditate do yog. To know oneself. To connect with that silent peace which is the soul's true nature. He calls this peace Paramshanti — the supreme peace. And he insists that it is not far away. It is closer than your own breath.

“Aaj ke samay mein meditation choice nahi rahi, yeh ek necessity ban chuki hai.”

“In today's time, meditation is no longer a choice — it has become a necessity.”

This book is for that quiet voice inside you which keeps saying — there must be more peace than this. There is. And the path begins with one small step. Sit. Close the eyes. Breathe. And let the soul begin to remember itself.

CHAPTER TWO

What Meditation Truly Is

Most people think meditation means closing eyes and trying to make the mind blank. That is not wrong, but it is not the whole picture either. The word meditation in English is used for many practices today — breathing exercises, mindfulness, body scans, guided relaxations. Each has some value. But the original word for meditation in Sanatan tradition is yog.

And the meaning of yog is not posture. It is not breath. It is not stillness for its own sake. Yog means union. Connection. The connection of self with the higher self. The connection of the soul with its source. That is the heart of true meditation. Paramshanti is the highest level of consciousness, the supreme state of Chitta. Every scripture speaks about Paramshanti. Bapuji experienced this state of Paramshanti and taught it to us, and we want to teach it to you through the foundation of Sanatan knowledge. Everything else — breath, posture, mantra — are simply tools that prepare us for this connection.

In modern times, meditation has often been separated from its deeper roots. People are taught only to focus on breath and flow of thoughts. The soul is not mentioned. The source is not mentioned. And so the practice gives temporary relief, but not lasting peace.

There is a difference between mindfulness and real meditation. Mindfulness is a technique. It teaches us to watch our thoughts, observe our breath, focus on the present moment. It is useful. It calms the mind. It releases stress. It helps with anxiety. But it is the doorway, not the destination. The destination of meditation is a deeper state — what the scriptures call samadhi — where there is thoughtlessness, no agitation, only pure awareness resting in itself. Today the Western world has removed religion and is working only on breathing and thoughts, and they call that meditation.

Sanatan yog — the ancient path — does not stop at calming the mind. It moves further. It asks: who is meditating? Who is observing the breath? Who is the one inside this body? It leads us to the soul. And from the soul, it leads us to the supreme. This is the meditation that Bapuji teaches. It is called Paramshanti Yog — the yoga of supreme peace.

“Yog ka arth hai jod — atma ka paramatma se jod.”

“The meaning of yog is union — the union of the soul with the Supreme.”

If you take only mindfulness, you will get peace of mind for a while. If you take Paramshanti Yog, you begin to dissolve the very root of disturbance — because you start to know yourself as the soul, and the soul never lacks peace. Peace is its very nature.

CHAPTER THREE

The Science of Meditation

Meditation is an ancient spiritual practice, but in our time, modern science has begun to confirm what the sages have known for thousands of years. The body, the brain, and even the cells respond beautifully when we sit in stillness. It is worth understanding a little of this, because it builds quiet confidence in the practice.

Our brain produces electrical activity in different patterns called brain waves. When we are busy, anxious, or running between tasks, the brain is in beta state — fast waves, high alertness, often tiring over time. The moment we close our eyes and breathe deeply, the brain naturally shifts to alpha state — slower waves, deeper relaxation, gentle ease. With deeper meditation, the brain may enter theta state, where the mind becomes very still, almost thought-free. This is the territory that meditation gradually opens for us.

Inside the brain, there is a small almond-shaped region called the amygdala. The amygdala is closely tied to our reactions of fear, anger, and anxiety. Studies have shown that with regular meditation, the amygdala actually becomes smaller and less reactive. We get less hijacked by sudden emotions. There is more space between trigger and reaction.

At the same time, another important region called the prefrontal cortex — which is responsible for clear thinking, decision making, focus, and emotional regulation — becomes stronger and more developed. So meditation actually re-shapes the brain in a healthier direction.

The body also releases what are often called happy hormones or feel-good hormones. Dopamine brings a sense of motivation and pleasure. Serotonin brings calm, contentment, and steadiness of mood. Endorphins bring a sense of natural well-being. These are gently produced when we meditate, especially with regularity.

Stress hormones such as cortisol, which keep the body in a constant alert state, slowly come down. The nervous system shifts from fight-and-flight to rest-and-restore. The heart rate steadies. Blood pressure tends to settle. Sleep improves. The immune system functions better. And the inner experience of life softens.

This is the gift of meditation, even from the purely physical and scientific point of view. We are not chasing a mystical experience. We are simply allowing the body and brain to do what they were always meant to do — return to balance. And from this physical balance, the deeper spiritual experiences naturally unfold.

But please remember, this is only the outer layer. The real reason to meditate is not just brain waves or hormones. The real reason is what lies beneath all of that — the soul, the Source, Paramshanti. Science is the beautiful icing. The spiritual experience is the cake.

CHAPTER FOUR

Techniques Of Meditation

Meditation not as a single method, but as a collection of techniques that help a person move from mental disturbance toward self-awareness and connection with the Supreme. people need to understand that there is a huge difference between meditation and Sanatan Yog. Meditation is a technique, one part. Meditation means Dhyana (focus/attention), and if we understand Yog completely through the Yoga Sutras, then meditation is only a small lesson of it.

Let us look at different meditation techniques practised in today's time.

Ashtanga Yog. Each limb prepares the practitioner for the next, like rungs on a ladder leading inward. Yama, Niyama, Asana, Pranayama, Pratyahara, Dharana, Dhyana, Samadhi are part of Ashtang Yog

One important technique is mindfulness meditation, where a person observes thoughts continuously until they become calm. There is Breath awareness meditation as well, in which attention is placed on the incoming and outgoing breath.

Om chanting and mantra japa are described as methods that calm the mind and create positive inner vibrations. self-talk meditation, where a person detaches from memories and thoughts through conscious inner dialogue.

One-point concentration meditation is explained as focusing attention on a single centric point. Vipassana is referred to as the practice of observing thoughts and bodily sensations without reacting to them. Shavasana-based meditation and guided meditation are also mentioned as supportive practices for relaxation and inner focus.

Beyond these methods, Atma Jagriti (soul awakening) and the connection of the soul with the Supreme Soul as the highest form of meditation. Paramshanti meditation as a supreme state of eternal peace, self-realization, freedom from karmic bondage, and awakening of the soul's infinite inner power.

CHAPTER FIVE

Difference Between Meditation and Yog

Meditation and Paramshanti Yog are not the same. Meditation is described as a technique or one part of Yog, while Paramshanti Yog is complete spiritual path connected with soul awakening, self-realization, and union with the Supreme Consciousness.

Ordinary meditation mainly focuses on calming the mind, reducing stress, controlling thoughts, and improving concentration. Practices such as mindfulness, breath awareness, Om chanting, and observing thoughts are explained as methods that help people temporarily disconnect from anxiety and mental disturbance. Modern meditation often works only on breathing and thought observation, without focusing on God, the soul, or spiritual realization. Because of this, the peace gained through ordinary meditation is described as temporary.

Paramshanti Yog, however, is explained as the highest state of consciousness. It is not limited to mental relaxation. Its purpose is awakening the soul (Atma Jagriti), realizing one's true self, and connecting the soul with the Supreme Soul (Paramatma). Paramshanti Yog helps a person move from Bhog (material indulgence) toward Yog (divine union). It is connected with Sanatan knowledge, self-awareness, and liberation from karmic bondage accumulated over infinite births.

Paramshanti which translates to “Supreme Peace” — an eternal state of every soul rather than temporary calmness. Through this Yog, a person awakens inner divine power, develops compassion, love, fearlessness, and freedom from hatred, stress, and ignorance. Unlike ordinary meditation, which may provide short-term relief, Paramshanti Yog is a path toward permanent peace, permanent joyfulness, self-independence, and realization of the soul’s infinite nature.

In Paramshanti yog, A seeker connects with divine sankalpas (sacred intentions) for the welfare of the entire universe. The practitioner is encouraged to visualize divine light descending throughout the multiverse, supreme peace spreading everywhere, divine energy filling all creation, and the transformation of the collective atmosphere.

There are three important stages in this process: first is sankalp, the creation of a divine intention; second is visualization, where the seeker clearly forms the spiritual image within the mind; and third is the emotional experience of the energy itself. The practitioner must fully believe in the sankalp, visualize it with clarity, and deeply feel its spiritual energy. Through continuous and repeated practice, the soul gradually becomes aligned with higher consciousness and divine awareness.

CHAPTER SIX

The Mind: Friend or Enemy

Bapuji describes Mind as Monkey which keeps running in all direction aimlessly. Sanatan scriptures describe the mind as markat — like a monkey. Always jumping. Always restless. One thought to another, one memory to another, one worry to another. It never stops. Even when you sit quietly, the monkey keeps moving.

This is why meditation feels difficult at first. We sit down hoping for peace, and within a few seconds, the mind begins to wander. We remember what someone said yesterday. We worry about tomorrow, and start planning. The thoughts come like waves, one after another. And we begin to feel that we have failed at meditation.

But here is the truth. The mind has not failed you, and you have not failed the meditation. The mind is simply doing its job. Its very nature is to think. Asking the mind to stop thinking is like asking a flame to stop being hot. It cannot. So if we keep trying to control the mind, we will keep losing.

Even the great sages of old struggled with this. To suppress the mind by force is almost impossible. So what is the solution? The solution given by Bapuji is simple and powerful — do not try to control the mind. Try to direct it. Try to engage it. Give it pure knowledge to rest on, and it will quiet down on its own. If the mind is a child, you cannot simply order it to sit still. But if you give the child something interesting and beautiful to focus on, it sits naturally. The same with the mind. Give it the breath, and it begins to settle. Give it a mantra like Paramshanti, and it begins to vibrate with that peace. Give it the soul, and it slowly turns inward. Give it the Source, and it goes quiet by itself.

Bapuji says — engage the mind in gyan, in knowledge of the soul. The more you fill the mind with high, pure, divine knowledge, the more your old thought-patterns lose their grip on you. The mind is not your enemy. It only becomes your enemy when it is left wandering without direction. Give it a direction, and the same mind becomes your closest friend on the spiritual path.

“Mann ko niyantran nahi karna hai — mann ko sahi disha dikhani hai.”

“The mind is not to be controlled — the mind is to be given the right direction.”

CHAPTER SEVEN

Without knowledge Yog is Incomplete

Bhagavad Gita, where Lord Krishna declares that nothing is greater than spiritual knowledge. Knowledge purifies the intellect, transforms sanskars (deep impressions), and ultimately leads the soul toward liberation.

Through devotion, you may definitely receive results, but only through knowledge can you reach the Supreme Being. Knowledge is supreme. Knowledge is the highest. There is nothing more purifying than knowledge.

There is nothing more purifying than knowledge. So if one want to become pure, if one want to become spiritually purified, if one want to attain the supreme state, then: the mind must become pure, the intellect must become pure, and sanskars (deep impressions/nature) must be transformed.

People become extremely attached to their own patterns and behaviours. They become rigid regarding themselves. That is why meditation becomes very difficult for them. For such people, meditation only means calming the mind temporarily and experiencing a little peace for some time.

Bapuji always says: Engage your mind in knowledge. The more you engage your mind in knowledge throughout life, the more your intellect becomes detached from this entire world. Because to know yourself means to go inward. Bapuji has given us true knowledge about Journey of Soul, Life after Death, Theory of karma, Multiverse, Creations, Creators, etc.. Bapuji has around 4000 videos in his YouTube channel about Behad (Infinite Knowledge).

Knowledge alone is not enough. Sanskar (Impression) transformation requires three essential elements: Knowledge (Gyan), Meditation (Yog), and spiritual power received from the Supreme Source. A person may intellectually understand what is right, yet still remain unable to overcome anger, addictions, fear, or old habits. This is because sanskar cannot change without spiritual power.

Bapuji teaches only- Path of Knowledge -Gyan Marg. Path of knowing oneself. Many methods have been given for controlling the mind, and many forms of yoga have been taught throughout spiritual traditions. Today, when we speak about yoga, we hear of Karma Yog, Bhakti Yog, and Buddhi Yog. But among all these, the highest is Buddhi Yog — the Yoga of Higher Intellect.

Only through Buddhi Yog can the mind truly be controlled. The greatest struggle people face is learning how to control the mind, because the weaknesses of the mind cannot disappear in a single day. The mind cannot be transformed instantly; it requires time, patience, continuous practice. As one gradually moves deeper into meditation, discrimination (vivek), and detachment (vairagya), the mind slowly comes under control and becomes purified.

Real power comes through connection with the Supreme Source during meditation. Consciousness originates in the soul. The soul influences the mind, the mind influences the intellect, the intellect activates sanskars, and sanskars influence actions, behaviour, and even biology. Through meditation, divine energy purifies this entire inner system, bringing peace, clarity, strength, and transformation to human life.

“Aur tabhi aapki ye jigryasa jaise-jaise bani rahegi na, aapke andar gyan ko sunne samajhne ka jo utsah hai vo badhta rahega, aur phir aap uski aur badhte jayenge.”

“As long as this curiosity remains alive within you, your enthusiasm to listen to and understand knowledge will continue increasing. And then you will continue moving further toward it”

CHAPTER EIGHT

The Paramshanti Mantra

There is one tool in this entire practice that Bapuji has given particular emphasis to. A simple mantra.. Paramshanti.

It looks ordinary on the page. But when it is spoken with awareness, and especially when it is repeated, it carries a vibration of its own. The word param means supreme, highest, ultimate. The word shanti means peace. Together they mean the supreme peace — a peace that is beyond ordinary calm, beyond temporary relief. It is the soul's own original state.

Every word is a vibration. Every word carries energy. When we repeat words of anger, the body and the atmosphere around us absorb that anger. When we repeat words of fear, the same happens. And when we repeat a mantra like Paramshanti — slowly, sincerely, with feeling — the same law works in our favour. The vibration of supreme peace begins to settle into us.

Begin out loud. Paramshanti... Paramshanti... Paramshanti. Let your voice say it gently. Feel the sound move through your chest, your throat, your forehead. Continue for a minute or two.

Then bring it softer. Whisper it. Paramshanti... Paramshanti. Keep the breath natural, and let the word ride the breath quietly.

Then bring it inward. Let the word become silent — repeated only in the mind. Paramshanti... Paramshanti. You will notice that the mind, which was earlier jumping from thought to thought, now has something gentle to rest on. Slowly, naturally, it begins to settle.

Bapuji has often said that in this restless age, mantra repetition is one of the simplest and most effective methods for the modern seeker. The mind cannot easily be forced into silence — but it can be lovingly drawn into a mantra. And the Paramshanti mantra works on three levels at once: it brings peace to the mind, it purifies the inner state, and it slowly connects the soul with its true identity, which is itself supreme peace.

You can use this mantra at any time. Sitting in meditation. Walking. Lying down to sleep. Whenever the mind is agitated. Whenever a difficult situation arises. Whenever fear or anger begins to rise. Just remember the word, and quietly repeat it. The peace it carries is real, and it has been waiting for you.

CHAPTER NINE

Working with Thoughts

Most modern teachers tell us, very kindly, to simply observe our thoughts. Just watch them. Do not engage them. Let them pass like clouds in the sky. There is wisdom in this. It is a useful early step. It teaches us that we are not our thoughts.

But Bapuji adds a deeper layer here, and it is important. He says — do not only watch your thoughts. Transform them. Replace them. Because thoughts are not as innocent as they look.

Have you noticed that when you sit down to meditate, suddenly old memories rise up? Things you had not thought about in years. Old hurts, regrets, quarrels. They come up because they are stored in the subconscious mind. The deeper part of the mind, where impressions of this life and even past lives are kept. When the surface mind becomes still in meditation, these deeper impressions begin to rise to the surface.

Now here is the danger. If you simply watch these thoughts, without changing them, they begin to attach themselves to your emotions. And the moment a thought connects with an emotion, it becomes much stronger. It actually gets recharged. Like topping up a mobile phone, the memory gets fresh energy. Instead of fading, it grows.

For example, suppose a memory of someone who hurt you arises. If you watch it and let it linger, the feeling of hurt rises too. Anger may follow. Sadness may follow. The thought and the feeling fuse together, and now the impression is even more deeply etched in the subconscious. You wanted to release it, but you have actually strengthened it.

Bapuji's teaching is — when such thoughts come, do not feed them. Replace them with pure resolutions. Speak inwardly to yourself with conscious affirmations. These are not empty words. They are sankalp — divine resolutions.

When you repeat them with feeling, they begin to reprogram the subconscious mind. The old recordings slowly weaken. New, clean recordings take their place. The emotional charge of past hurts begins to dissolve.

This is why Bapuji's meditation is also called a transforming meditation. It does not only calm the mind. It re-writes the mind. Slowly, patiently, sankalp by sankalp, the inner state changes. And as the inner state changes, the outer life also begins to soften.

CHAPTER TEN

Visualisation and the Power of Emotion

Pure thought is powerful. But thought combined with emotion is many times more powerful. This is why visualisation is such a useful tool in meditation. It is not magic. It is the natural way our inner world responds. Try this small experiment. Close your eyes for a moment and remember a place where you have been deeply happy. Maybe the mountains. Maybe the sea. Maybe a quiet temple. Maybe your grandmother's home. Picture it. Feel the air there, colours, sounds. Within a few seconds, your shoulders drop a little. Your face softens. The body begins to remember the happiness it felt there.

Notice what just happened. You did not actually travel anywhere. The body did not move. But the inner state changed, simply because you remembered with feeling. This is the power of visualisation.

Now apply this in meditation. When you affirm — “I am in peace” — do not just say the words. Feel it as already happening. The mind cannot easily tell the difference between a vivid inner image and an outer event. So when you give it a peaceful image with feeling, the mind starts producing peaceful energy.

This is why emotion is so important. The word emotion itself comes from energy in motion. When emotion joins your meditation, energy begins to move in the direction you have chosen. You are no longer fighting the old patterns — you are quietly creating new ones. Bapuji always encourages to think of Almighty Authority as great-great-great Grandfather of our soul. Relationships helps built emotions and emotions gives more force to get connected to almighty authority

“Vichaar ko bhav se jodo, to vichaar ki shakti badh jaati hai.”

“When a thought is joined with feeling, the power of that thought multiplies.”

A caution here, the same law works in the opposite direction. If you visualise pain, fear or worry with strong feelings, the same energy of pain begins to move within us. So choose visualisations carefully. Use them for peace, soul awareness & divine light. Never feed the mind with fearful images during meditation, because the body and the energy will follow whatever the mind is shown with feeling.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

A Simple Decoded Meditation Process

Sakshi Patel often describes the practice of meditation through a simple decoding of the very word itself. Each letter of the word MEDITATE, she says, can be remembered as a step in the practice. It is a gentle way for a beginner to hold the whole journey in the heart.

M — “mei” The awareness of “I”

Begin with the simple awareness of yourself. Not as a body, not as a role, but as a presence. “I am here.” That is the doorway. Full awareness of the “I” who is sitting, breathing, observing. This is the first step inward.

E — Feel the energy

Once awareness is established, begin to feel the energy moving within you. The breath. The subtle warmth. The quiet vibration in the chest. The flow of life inside the body. You are not trying to do anything. You are only feeling.

D — Detach from the body

Now gently let go of body-identification. The body is here, but you are more than the body. Feel the body relax, soften, become quiet. You are not the body — you are the awareness inside it.

I — Drop the desires

For these few minutes, set aside every desire. Every wanting. Every running of the mind toward this or that. The only longing that remains, if any, is for the experience of the divine, the experience of peace. Everything else, let it go.

T — Take a pause

Pause everything. The doing. The planning. The worrying. The remembering. Let the inner system come to a halt, like a still lake at dawn. Even thirty seconds of true pausing is enough to begin opening the inner door.

A — Anchor in your real self

Now turn toward your real self. The soul. The conscious presence that has always been here. Feel yourself as the soul, resting between the eyebrows, at the seat of the third eye. A point of light. Pure. Steady. Calm.

T — Tension dissolves

As you rest in this awareness, notice how tension begins to fall away. The shoulders soften. The jaw relaxes. The breath deepens. The mind, which was loud, becomes quieter. You are not making this happen — you are simply allowing it.

E — Enter inner silence

Finally, enter the silence within. Not the absence of sound, but the presence of stillness. This is the natural state of the soul. Overthinking ends. Worry ends. You are home. Even for a moment, you are home.

This eight-step inner movement is not a rigid technique. It is a gentle map. Some days you may rest at the breath. Some days you may go all the way into silence. Both are fine. What matters is that you are walking the path, day after day, with patience and love.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Soul Realisation

Earlier we focused on the breath. Then on the mantra. Then on the thoughts. Now we go a step further. Beyond breath, beyond mantra, beyond thought — to the soul itself. This is the heart of Paramshanti meditation.

The soul, according to this tradition, has a specific seat in the body. It rests at the centre of the forehead, between the two eyebrows, at the point where Indian seekers place the tilak. This area is also associated with the agya chakra, the third eye, and with the pineal gland in modern anatomy. This is where the soul makes its connection with the body, and from where it directs everything that the body does. So during meditation, gently bring all your attention to this point between the eyebrows. Do not strain the eyes upward. Just rest your inner attention there, softly, as if a quiet light were glowing there.

Why is the soul difficult to perceive? Because it is hidden under many layers — layers of body identification, of mental habits, of emotional reactions, of stored memories. The soul is always there, shining like a tiny sun. But the layers are so thick that we cannot easily see it. This is why we need a step-by-step practice. Each session of meditation peels back one more layer.

Do not worry whether you actually “see” the soul or not. Most beginners do not see anything at first, and that is perfectly fine. What matters is the inner remembrance. The act of resting the attention there. The act of repeatedly affirming the soul’s true nature.

Slowly, with patience, something shifts. The body becomes very quiet. The breath becomes very fine. The mind goes still. And there is a sense — sometimes faint, sometimes clear — of resting in a calm, light, peaceful presence. From this point, the meditation is no longer an effort. It begins to flow on its own. The peace you were chasing turns out to be your own original state. And the chasing ends.

“Atma hi shanti hai, atma hi prakash hai, atma hi anand hai.”

“The soul itself is peace, the soul itself is light, the soul itself is bliss.”

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Connecting with the Source

Once you have begun to sit as the soul, a natural next step opens up. The soul, having remembered itself, wishes to connect with its Source. This is the original meaning of yog — the union of the soul with the Supreme.

Every great tradition speaks of this connection in its own language. Some call it the One. Some call it God. Some call it the Supreme Father. Some call it Pure Consciousness. Bapuji, in his discourses, simply points to it as the supreme, formless, eternal presence from which every soul has come and to which every soul will return.

In meditation, you do not need a complicated theology to feel this connection. You only need a simple inner gesture. Having rested as the soul, gently turn your attention upward and inward, toward the highest divine presence — however you understand it. If you have a personal form of the divine, you may use that. If you have no specific form, simply turn toward pure light and pure peace.

Then, as the soul, quietly invite the divine light to descend into you. Picture a soft, pure, white light coming down from the highest source, entering through the top of the head, settling at the seat of the soul between the eyebrows. Feel it filling you. Feel the body softening in that light. Feel the heart opening. Feel peace expanding.

This is not imagination, connection is real. As you do this repeatedly, the divine response begins to be felt as a quiet inner sweetness, a deep calm, a steadiness that you did not generate by yourself. It comes to you, not from you. You become a receiver.

As this connection deepens, your inner state changes. You begin to feel that you are filled with peace, but the peace is not just yours — it has a source. And from you, this peace can radiate outward, into your room, into your home, into the lives of those you love. The soul becomes a channel. This is what is meant by becoming an ocean of peace. You are not the source. You are joined to the Source.

This is the deepest level of Paramshanti meditation. Connection. The soul, no longer separate, resting in the lap of the Supreme. Even a few minutes of this connection per day will quietly transform your life. The mind will steady. The heart will warm. Fears will lose their hold. And you will begin to live with a quiet inner light that goes wherever you go.

“Atma ka paramatma se jod — yahi yog hai, yahi sachcha meditation hai.”

“The union of the soul with the Supreme — this alone is yog, this alone is true meditation.”

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Beginning Your Practice

Stage 1

If you have never meditated before, please do not begin with a long sitting. That is the first mistake most beginners make. They sit for thirty minutes, the mind wanders, they get frustrated, and they give up. The right beginning is small. Gentle. Patient.

Start with just two to five minutes. That is enough. Find a place where you can sit comfortably without being disturbed. Sit on a chair, or on the floor, whichever is easier for your body. Keep the spine reasonably upright, but not tense. Place the hands gently on the lap. Close the eyes.

Even this simple act of closing the eyes is powerful. Modern science tells us that when we close our eyes, the brain shifts from beta waves (the busy, alert state) to alpha waves (a calmer, more relaxed state). Just by shutting one sense — sight — the mind already begins to turn inward. You are giving it permission to rest.

Now bring your attention gently to the breath. Do not try to change it. Just feel it. Feel the air coming in, feel the air going out. Notice the small pause between each breath. Stay with it for a minute or two.

If you wish, you can use a simple counted breath. Inhale slowly to a count of four. Hold gently for two. Exhale slowly to a count of four. This is one of the oldest beginner techniques in the tradition, and it works because the mind and the breath are deeply linked. When the breath becomes calm, the mind becomes calm. There is no exception to this law.

After a minute or two of this breath awareness, do not strain. If thoughts come, let them come, but do not chase them. Just gently return to the breath. The mind will wander. That is fine. The wandering is not failure. The returning is the practice. After a few days of doing this, you will notice something. The mind will still wander, but it will return faster. The body will feel quieter. The breath will deepen on its own. Sleep may improve. Small frustrations may lose some of their sharpness. These are the first quiet gifts of meditation. Trust them. They are real.

Once this short practice becomes comfortable, slowly extend the time to ten minutes, then twenty. There is no hurry. Even fifteen minutes a day, done sincerely, will change your inner state more than an hour of forced sitting.

Stage 2

Thoughts Should Not Only Be Observed — They Must Be Changed. But according to the understanding received through Bapuji's knowledge, thoughts must also be transformed. You must connect yourself with positive affirmations and pure sankalpas.

when thoughts come, re-focus on the breath and then chant the mantra given by Bapuji: "Paramshanti." The vibrations generated by this mantra automatically stabilize the mind. Repeat the word continuously: "Paramshanti... Paramshanti..." At first, chant aloud. Later, slowly repeat it mentally. Every word is vibration. We ourselves are energy beings. When words, thoughts, emotions, vibration, and energy become aligned, transformation begins happening within us naturally.

Stage 3

Connect yourself with positive affirmations and pure sankalpas. "I am free from stress." "I am free from worry." "All tension is leaving me." "I am peaceful.” “I am joyful.” These Positive sankalpas gradually reprogram the subconscious mind. Repeated thoughts slowly become emotional reality. As these affirmations deepen, your emotional state also begins changing.

Stage 4

Visualization. Visualization is extremely powerful. If you remember a joyful place you once visited, immediately your emotions reconnect with that memory. Similarly, when you visualize yourself peaceful, blissful, content, and joyful, your emotional state gradually begins transforming. Through this process, one slowly enters a true meditative state filled with deep peace.

Stage 5

Soul Consciousness and Self-Realization. Now the meditation process becomes deeper. Now the meditation process becomes deeper. Create these realizations in mind: “I am free from stress.” “I am a pure conscious soul.” “My true nature is purity.” “This body has been given for spiritual practice and karma.” Do not become attached to the body. Everything related to the body is temporary. Enter present awareness. Forget the past. Become a witness to the future. Trust that whatever happens will be beneficial.

Then become silent.

After that, see yourself as the soul beyond body, mind, and intellect. The soul resides at the point between the eyebrows, at the Ajna Chakra. Now meditate on the soul itself. The soul cannot be seen physically because many layers of ignorance cover it. But gradually, through this process, those layers begin dissolving.

Stage 6

Then realize:

“I am a pure conscious soul.” “My true nature is supreme light.” “My true nature is supreme peace.” “My true nature is supreme bliss.” Peace and bliss are not things we must search for. They are our original nature itself.

Stage 7

God-Realization and Becoming Brahm Swaroop.

After self-realization comes God-realization. When you see yourself as a soul, naturally the question arises: “Who is my Creator?” Meditate upon the Supreme Consciousness according to your faith and spiritual path. Remember the Nirakar (formless), Nirgun (attributeless) Supreme Brahman — the Creator of all souls. Draw divine light and divine power from the Supreme into yourself.

That divine light flows directly into the soul and gradually spreads everywhere. As this happens: thoughts disappear, ego dissolves, body-consciousness weakens, soul-consciousness increases. Then one gradually becomes Brahm Swaroop.

This is the true technique of meditation. The mind can be calmed. But thoughts must not merely be allowed to continue endlessly. They must be transformed.

“Aankhein band karna hi meditation ki shuruaat hai.”

“Closing the eyes is itself the beginning of meditation.”

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

Transforming Life

Bapuji often makes a beautiful distinction that explains why most people, even successful and comfortable people, still feel inwardly restless. He says there are two ways a human being can live — the way of bhog, and the way of yog.

Bhog means enjoyment, indulgence, the path of using the senses to chase pleasure. It is the way of getting more, having more, consuming more. There is nothing wrong with this in moderation. But when life becomes only bhog, a strange thing happens. The more we consume, the emptier we feel. The more we chase, the more tired we become. The senses cannot give us lasting peace because their nature is to want again. The person on the path of indulgence is connected to nature — to the body, name, fame, gross worldly objects. The small self does whatever, it does for enjoyment, for indulgence, for accumulation. And so, instead of peace, it gets tension. Instead of contentment, it gets chasing. Instead of rest, it gets exhaustion.

Yog, on the other hand, means connection. The same human being, when they free themselves from bhogi state and rise into their soul state — turning toward the higher self, toward the Source — becomes a yogi. The yogi is not against the world. The yogi simply does not depend on the world for inner peace. The bhogi worries. The yogi contemplates. Chinta (worry) is the result of indulgence. Chintan (contemplation) is the result of yog. The first one eats us alive. The second one heals us slowly.

This is not a call to leave the world. We have homes, families, work, responsibilities. We must live in the world. But we can live in it differently. We can perform our duties and yet keep the inner connection with the soul and the Source alive. That is the real meaning of yog. Action in the world, but anchor in the divine.

Even five minutes of meditation a day begins to shift us from bhogi-mode to yogi-mode. The inner attitude changes. The chasing softens. The contentment grows. And slowly, life starts to feel lighter — not because the work has reduced, but because the worry has reduced.

“Bhogi banoge to chinta milegi, yogi banoge to chintan milega.”

“Live as an indulger and you will get worry; live as a yogi and you will get contemplation.”

Sage with Golden Bowl

There is a small story which Sakshi ji, shares to explain why meditation is the highest wealth. It is a quiet story, but it carries the whole essence of this path.

Once there was a king. As he was passing through his kingdom, he met a humble sage, a bhikshuk — walking simply, holding a small begging bowl. The king felt drawn to the monk’s peaceful presence and invited him to the palace. the king replaced sages humble begging bowl with a beautiful bowl of pure gold, studded with precious gems and pearls. The monk took it and quietly began walking home.

On the way back, a thief saw the golden bowl glittering in the sunlight. He followed the monk. He waited for the right moment. The monk noticed him and felt his peace being disturbed. So very quietly, when he reached the entrance of his small hut, he placed the golden bowl outside, before walking in. Then he sat down inside and began his meditation.

The thief, watching all this, was stunned. He thought to himself, “Anyone who can leave a golden bowl outside, unguarded, must surely have something even more valuable inside.” He crept into the hut, searched everywhere — but found nothing. Just an empty space. Just a meditating monk.

When the monk’s meditation ended, the thief sat down in front of him and curiously asked, the golden bowl outside? The sage smiled with great gentleness and replied that his treasure is meditation. Because of it, he live in supreme peace. When he noticed that this golden bowl was beginning to disturb peace, he put it down at once.”

This is the secret of the spiritual life. There are many kinds of wealth in this world — money, possessions, status, relationships, success. Each one has its place. But there is one wealth that is greater than all of them — the inner wealth of peace. The wealth of Paramshanti. The wealth that no one can steal, no situation can take away, no loss can reduce.

When you meditate, you are not wasting time. You are building this wealth, drop by drop. And one day, you too will be able to walk through the world like that quiet monk — peaceful, undisturbed, smiling at the storms because something deeper inside you is already at rest.

Sleep Yog

Sleep has become broken in our time. Many people do not sleep well any more. The body lies down, but the mind keeps running. Thoughts, screens, worries, conversations from the day — all of them follow us into the night. And we wake up tired, not rested. The very thing that was supposed to restore us has become another struggle.

Bapuji has given a beautiful teaching for this. He calls it Nidra Yog — Sleep Yoga. The idea is simple. Sleep itself can become a divine meditation. Instead of falling into sleep with a heavy, agitated mind, we can fall into sleep with the soul softly held in the lap of the Supreme. Then even the hours of unconsciousness become spiritually productive.

Before sleeping, sit up gently for five to ten minutes. Close the eyes. Do not check the phone. Do not replay the day's conflicts. Instead, take a few deep breaths and let the body soften. Bring the attention to the forehead. Repeat softly within — "I am a peaceful soul. I am light. I am supreme peace." Let the heart settle.

Now invite the divine light to descend into you. Picture it like a gentle silver-white glow coming down through the top of the head, filling the body, washing away the tiredness of the day. As this happens, mentally release the day. Whatever happened, let it go. Whatever did not happen, let it go. Tomorrow will come on its own. Right now, you are resting in Paramshanti.

When you lie down, do not jump back into thinking. Continue the quiet inner repetition — Paramshanti, Paramshanti, Paramshanti. Let the mantra ride the breath. Let it carry you across the soft border into sleep. You will fall asleep faster, you will sleep more deeply, and very often you will wake up with a strange new clarity, as if the soul itself had been bathed in light through the night.

Bapuji always encourages all seeker to transform daily life by just taking small sankalps with Almighty and do daily activity in his remembrance. Including sleeping.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

The Best Time to Meditate

This question comes up almost every in mind of beginners that When one meditate? Is morning better, or evening? Is there a special hour? Will it be more powerful at a particular time? Let us understand this carefully, because it matters.

The traditional answer is Brahma Muhurat — the sacred hour just before dawn, roughly between three and five in the morning. This time is considered ideal because the world is still asleep, the atmosphere is quiet, the air is fresh, the body has rested, and the mind has not yet been pulled into the activities of the day. If you can sit at this hour, the practice goes deep with very little effort.

But here is what Bapuji teaches with great clarity, and what every working person needs to hear. The time of day is important, but it is not the most important thing. What matters more is the inner state. What matters more is the willingness to actually sit. Bapuji's words are: "Jab jago, tab savera." Whenever you wake up — that is dawn for you. Whenever you turn toward the divine — that is the right time. The clock matters less than the heart.

Consider this. A person wakes early, drags themselves to the temple at 4 a.m., sits down to meditate — but the mind is wandering through worries, complaints, plans, and resentments. Another person sits at 9 p.m., tired from the day, but with sincere attention turns toward the soul, toward the Source, with quiet love certainly he is closer to yog.

This is why true meditation is called the state beyond time. A real meditative state is one that takes you out of the play of time. So the rule is simple — do not wait for the perfect hour. Start when you can. Start when mind is ready. Even better, train yourself to be able to meditate at any hour, in any condition. That is the real mastery.

Still, if you can arrange it, a regular morning sitting is highly recommended. Before the day fills you up with noise and demands, give yourself fifteen to thirty quiet minutes. It will set the entire tone of your day. You will be calmer in traffic. Kinder at home. Steadier at work. More patient with your own mistakes.

And just as the body needs three meals to stay nourished, the soul thrives on three meditation moments through the day. A short sitting in the morning. A short pause in the middle of the day, even five minutes will do. And a longer sitting before sleep, to settle the mind and prepare for what Bapuji calls Sleep Yog — meditation that flows quietly into sleep itself.

In the end, the right time to meditate is whenever your soul is ready. And your soul has been ready, quietly waiting, for a very long time.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

The True Benefits of Meditation

When people first ask about meditation, they usually want to know — what will I get from it? Will my stress reduce? Will my sleep improve? Will my mind become quieter? The answer to all of these is yes. But these are only the surface benefits. The deeper gifts are far greater.

On the level of the body, meditation calms the nervous system. The heart steadies. Blood pressure tends to come down. Sleep becomes deeper. The immune system strengthens. Headaches reduce. Many small physical complaints quietly soften when the inner state becomes peaceful.

On the level of the mind, anxiety reduces. Overthinking slows. Decisions become clearer. Memory and focus improve. Reactions become less explosive. There is more space between what happens and how we respond to it. The mind, which used to be a noisy crossroads, slowly becomes a quiet inner room.

On the level of emotions, something gentle starts to happen. Kindness rises naturally. Patience grows. Old hurts begin to lose their power. Forgiveness, which once seemed impossible, begins to feel possible. The heart softens — not because someone told it to, but because peace has begun to live in it. Bapuji calls these the natural fruits of a meditative life: daya, prem, karuna — compassion, love, and tender care.

On the level of relationships, meditation brings calm into the home. The same family members who irritated us yesterday seem more bearable today. We listen more. We argue less. We carry less old anger. We project less old fear. The atmosphere of the house quietly changes. And the people around us, even if they never meditate, begin to feel the change. This is what Bapuji means by aura cleansing — your inner field becomes purer, and others around you breathe in that purity.

On the level of karma, meditation works at the root. According to Bapuji, deep meditation releases the burden of impressions stored within from past actions, even from many lifetimes. The fear that has been carried for years begins to loosen. The hatred, the lust, the deep-seated longings — they all lose their grip when the soul awakens to its own nature. This is the rarely spoken but most precious gift — freedom from inner burden.

And on the deepest level, meditation gives us a permanent solution. Most of life's solutions are temporary. We earn money, but new bills come. We solve one problem, another arises. We rest one day, exhaustion returns the next. But Paramshanti is not temporary. Once you have truly tasted the peace of the soul, that peace begins to stay with you. It becomes the floor under all your storms. You may still face difficulties, but you no longer break from them.

So please do not approach meditation only to feel better for an hour. Approach it as the gentlest, most patient transformation of your entire life. Sit a little, every day. The benefits will keep unfolding for years — quietly, steadily, deeply. There is no waste in this practice. Every minute returns to you, multiplied.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

World Peace Through Self-Transformation

Bapuji has given us a phrase that has become the heartbeat of this entire mission. “Swa parivartan se vishwa parivartan.” World transformation begins with self-transformation. At first this idea may sound poetic, even unrealistic. How can one quiet person sitting in yog actually change the world? The world is so large, so noisy, so troubled. What can one soul do?

And yet, when we look closely, this is exactly how everything has always changed. Every great transformation has begun with one inner shift in one inner being, which then spread outward like ripples in a still pond. A small group of awakened people can shift the atmosphere of an entire region. A larger group can shift the atmosphere of an entire world.

This is because thoughts are not just inner events. Thoughts are vibrations. Every thought we send out enters the atmosphere around us. If our thoughts are heavy with fear and anger, the atmosphere becomes heavy. If our thoughts are light with peace and love, the atmosphere becomes light. The collective atmosphere of the world today is being created, moment by moment, by the collective thoughts of all souls living on it.

When you sit in Paramshanti yog, thoughts and vibrations shift. The aura around you becomes brighter. Even the people who simply enter your room, your home, your office begin to feel a quiet calm. They may not know why. They may not even believe in meditation. But they feel something. Because energy does not lie.

If only a small percentage of souls on this earth begin to live as conscious souls, sending out peace vibrations daily, the collective atmosphere of the world begins to soften. Conflicts ease. Hearts open. New possibilities appear. This is not naïve. This is the deep mathematics of consciousness. Bapuji has called this the path of world transformation through soul awakening.

“Swa parivartan se vishwa parivartan.”

“World transformation begins with self-transformation.”

Becoming Self-Sufficient on the Path

The whole purpose of Paramshanti meditation is not to make you dependent on another teacher, another mentor, another healer. The purpose is to make you self-sufficient. To make you self-independent. To plant inside you the very tools you need to heal yourself, calm yourself, lift yourself, and connect yourself directly to the Source.

This is a very important point. A good teacher does not bind you to themselves. A good teacher gives you wings. The Paramshanti path, as Bapuji has shaped it, is exactly this kind of path. It is offered freely. It is taught simply. And it is designed so that, with time, you no longer need an outer helper to find your inner peace. You become your own helper.

“Bahar mat khojo — ander hi paramshanti hai.”

“Do not search outside — supreme peace is within you.”

World Meditation Day is a beautiful reminder that handful of awakened soul can change the whole world. On that day, millions of people across the globe sit together at the same time, choosing peace inside themselves. The collective field that day is measurably calmer. But, as Sakshi Patel often says, one day is not enough. The world does not heal from a single sitting any more than a person heals from a single moment of quiet. The peace must be daily. The remembrance must be daily. The vibration must be daily.

So when you sit each morning, do not think you are sitting only for yourself. You are sitting for the planet. You are sitting for your family. You are sitting for those who have not yet learned to sit. Every minute of your meditation is a quiet contribution to the world. The earth needs this. We can all feel it. And we can all be part of the answer.

PARAMSHANTI MOTIVATION & MEDITATION

A Companion YouTube Channel for Every Seeker

About the Channel

The teachings of meditation shared in this book come alive through a dedicated YouTube channel — Paramshanti Motivation & Meditation. It is a serene digital sanctuary created especially for souls who wish to walk the inner path with daily guidance, gentle support, and a steady voice that gives them the courage to sit quietly and meet themselves.

The channel is run by Sakshi Patel, based in Ahmedabad, Gujarat. With more than fifteen years of personal meditation practice, she has devoted her life to sharing the science of inner peace. Her approach is calm, clear, and deeply rooted — never dramatic, never rushed. She speaks as someone who has walked the path herself, not as someone teaching from books.

The entire work of the channel flows from the divine teachings of her revered Guru, Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, founder of Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay, and is supported by Anant Patel. The core focus is the soul's primary need — supreme peace, or Paramshanti — as revealed in Bapuji's Behad Gyan.

While Bapuji's main channel carries thousands of discourses on cosmology, the soul, karma, and the multiverse, this companion channel exists for one specific purpose: to help every seeker actually sit down and meditate. It is the practical wing of the same eternal knowledge — where understanding becomes experience.

"Meditation hi ek tarika hai jis se atma ki shaanti aur anand jaag uthe."

"Meditation is the way to awaken the soul's inner peace and bliss. When divine peace flows naturally from within, no outer situation can disturb you — because you begin to live as a conscious soul, not as a restless mind."

About the Meditation Playlists

The channel is carefully organised into playlists so that a seeker — whether brand new to meditation or already advanced — always finds the right next step. Each playlist is a gentle, progressive journey. Nothing is randomly placed. The flow is designed the way a real spiritual classroom would be: foundation first, depth later, and then the most subtle states.

From simple daily practices to deep soul-awakening journeys, the playlists span the entire arc of inner growth — beginning with breath, awareness, and stillness, then moving into soul remembrance, energy work, and finally into the highest experience of Paramshanti itself.

There are also daily live meditation sessions in the early morning hours. These live sittings have become a sacred routine for thousands of subscribers across the world, who join from different time zones to meditate together as one collective field of peace.

Types of Meditations — From Basics to Advanced

One of the most beautiful qualities of this channel is its full spectrum of meditation styles. A complete beginner is never thrown into deep practice on day one, and a seasoned practitioner is never left without something deeper to explore. The meditations broadly move through the following levels.

Beginner Meditations

These are the entry-level meditations — short, simple, and gentle. They focus on basic stillness, posture, breath awareness, calming the restless mind, and feeling at ease in silence. They are perfect for those who have never meditated before, or who feel anxious, stressed, or unable to sit quietly.

Intermediate Meditations

Once a seeker is comfortable sitting in silence, the practice deepens. Intermediate meditations introduce soul awareness — understanding that you are not the body or the mind, but a point of conscious light. They include practices for aura cleansing, releasing negative thoughts, raising vibration, and beginning to feel the soul's natural peace.

Advanced Meditations

The advanced meditations are reserved for those who have built a steady daily practice. Here the focus is on Atma Smriti (soul remembrance), connecting the soul with the Supreme Source, journeys into the inner light, and resting in the experience of Paramshanti itself. These are subtle, powerful sittings where meditation becomes transformation.

Topics of the Guided Meditations

Across the channel, the guided meditations cover a wide variety of inner needs. They are not random — each one is designed to address a specific state of life.

THE ART OF MEDITATION

Some of the most loved guided meditations include practices for stress release and instant inner calm; for anxiety and overthinking, quieting the restless mind; for healing the heart through emotional release and forgiveness; for aura cleansing and energy purification; for soul remembrance and self-realisation; for connection with the Supreme through meditation on the Ocean of Peace; for entering the state of divine bliss; for raising the vibration and frequency of the soul; for karma cleansing — releasing the burden of the past; for beginning the day in divine awareness through morning meditations; for settling the day in peace through evening meditations; for mantra and cosmic chant meditations; and for deep rest and subconscious healing through sleep meditations.

Each guided session is delivered in Sakshi Patel's gentle, anchored voice. She does not push or perform — she simply holds a quiet space, and the listener naturally settles into it. This is why her voice has become familiar and comforting to seekers in more than fifty countries.

“Nidra bhi divya meditation ban sakti hai, jab atma supreme se judti hai.”

“Sleep can become a divine meditation. When the soul rests in the Supreme, the body wakes up renewed, the mind wakes up clear, and the day begins in peace.”

A Channel for Every Stage of the Journey

Whether you are taking your very first breath in meditation, or you have been a practitioner for many years, this channel meets you exactly where you are. It is free, it is daily, it is rooted in pure knowledge, and it is offered in the spirit of Gyan Daan Maha Daan — sharing knowledge as the highest charity.

A GUIDED MEDITATION PRACTICE

A spoken meditation, in Sakshi Patel's voice, for sending Paramshanti vibrations to yourself and to the world

This final section is a gentle gift. It is a written version of the live guided meditation that Sakshi Patel offers on the Paramshanti channel. You can read it slowly to yourself. You can record it in your own voice. You can sit, close your eyes, and let someone you trust read it aloud. However you use it, please do not rush. Each line is meant to be felt, not just read.

Sit comfortably. Spine soft and upright. Hands resting gently on the lap. Close the eyes. Take three slow breaths, and let the world fall away for a few minutes. Then begin.

Close your eyes. Relax completely. Let your shoulders drop. Let your face soften. Let your hands rest. There is nothing to do right now. Nothing to chase. Nothing to fix. Just be here, with yourself, for these few quiet minutes.

First, gently soften the mind. Take a long, slow breath in. Let it out softly. Another long breath in. Let it out softly. And one more. With every breath in, draw in fresh, gentle, positive energy. With every breath out, release tension, worry, and any heaviness that has gathered through the day.

Imagine that every negative thought, every old fear, every stored stress is gently leaving you with the breath. There is no need to fight it. Just let it pass out, with the air. Allow yourself to become lighter, layer by layer.

Now, quietly say to yourself within: I am free from worry. I am free from fear. I am free from stress. Whatever has happened was right. Whatever is happening is right. Whatever will happen will also be right. All is well. All is unfolding as it should.

Bring your gentle attention to the point between your eyebrows — the seat of the soul. Rest there softly. Do not strain. Just place your awareness there, like placing a soft light on a quiet shelf. This is the home of the soul. This is where you truly live, inside this body.

Now begin to feel yourself as the soul. Not the body. Not the mind. Not the thoughts. Not the roles you play.

THE ART OF MEDITATION

You are a pure point of conscious light, resting between the eyebrows. Eternal. Calm. Untouched by anything that happens outside.

Repeat softly within: I am a pure, conscious soul. My true form is supreme light. My true nature is supreme peace. My true essence is supreme bliss. Let the words sink in. Let them not be just words. Let them be felt.

Imagine a soft, white light beginning to glow at the point between your eyebrows. A gentle, divine light. Steady. Peaceful. Bright but not blinding. This light is the soul, becoming visible to itself. Stay here for a few breaths.

Now feel this light begin to expand. From the seat of the soul, it spreads gently through your whole body. Every cell is being touched by this divine light. Every tension in the body is softening. The body becomes calm. The breath becomes fine. The heart becomes warm.

Continue to expand the light. It now fills your entire physical body. It surrounds you in a gentle circle, like a soft halo of peace. This is your aura — bright, clean, pure, full of Paramshanti vibrations.

Now let the light spread further. It moves through the room you are sitting in. It fills your whole home. It fills the air around your home. Every corner of your space is now filled with the vibration of supreme peace. Anyone who comes here will feel it, even if they cannot name it.

Now invite the divine source. Picture, above you, a soft, pure, supreme light — the Source of all peace, the Source of all love, the Source of all bliss. From this Source, a stream of divine light descends gently into the top of your head, and settles at the seat of the soul.

Receive it. Do not strain. Just receive it. Feel yourself being filled, very gently, by this divine peace. You are not creating this peace. You are simply opening to it. It has always been here. You are now letting it in.

As you receive this light, your soul becomes brighter. The peace within you deepens. The boundaries of who you thought you were begin to soften. You realise — quietly, without drama — that you are not as small as you thought. You are a soul, connected to the Source of all peace.

Now, from this filled state, begin to give. Begin to share. Begin to send. With each breath out, send Paramshanti vibrations into the world. To your family.

THE ART OF MEDITATION

To those you love. To those who are struggling. To those who are angry. To those who are afraid. To all souls who need peace right now.

Imagine the earth in front of you. Picture it gently. Now see all of us, all souls who are awake, sitting around this earth, sending peace toward it from every direction. Beams of soft white light coming down on the earth — from the north, the south, the east, the west.

Feel the atmosphere of the planet beginning to soften. Feel the heaviness lifting. Feel the noise quieting. The collective heart of the world is being touched by Paramshanti vibrations. Air becomes lighter. Water becomes purer. Fire becomes kinder. Earth becomes calmer. The five elements are being refined together with us.

Stay in this for a few quiet breaths. Just feel it. Paramshanti vibrating through you. Paramshanti vibrating from you. Paramshanti spreading silently through the world. Paramshanti, Paramshanti, Paramshanti.

Now gently rest. The work is done. The light has been sent. The world has been touched. You are still seated, but inside you, something has shifted. You feel lighter.

Cleaner. More yourself. More connected. More at home.

Stay with this stillness for as long as you wish. Do not rush back to the day. Let the peace settle into the marrow of your bones. Let it become familiar, so that when life is loud later, you can return to this place inside.

When you are ready, take a slow deep breath. Hold for a moment. Release gently. Become aware of the body again. Wiggle the fingers softly. Wiggle the toes. Let a small smile come to your lips. Slowly, very slowly, open the eyes.

Welcome back. You are not the same as you were before this meditation. Something has been quietly given to you, and something has been quietly given through you. Carry this peace into your day. Carry this peace into your family. Carry this peace into the world.

Paramshanti. Paramshanti. Paramshanti.

Behad ki param maha shanti to all souls.
