About Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

Bapuji — full name Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly called ‘Dadaji’ by the younger generation — was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. However, he spent his childhood in another village named Ambasan, also located in the Mehsana district.

In the early part of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realizing the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers to realize their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times, he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy (CA), he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law (LLB) degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, he established a spiritual institution called 'Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay' in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world, filled with suffering and disorder, into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt. Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as 'Maa,' worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to 18 hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realized through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of superconsciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji's teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the types of celestial creators across different dimensions, the creation of our solar system, galaxy, and universe, and most importantly, the transcendental knowledge of the multiverse and realities beyond it. His knowledge is supremely profound and is intended for highly evolved seekers, referred to as 'behad souls.' According to Bapuji, these 'behad souls' will play a key role in transforming this mortal world into an eternal divine realm.

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

This book is offered as one small attempt to preserve, in clear written English, what Bapuji has spoken on a single subject — spirit communication.

Bapuji has often pointed out that the visible world we walk through every day is in continuous communication with another world we do not see. The spirits of the departed move through it. The voices of saints and gurus reach down from it. Souls slip in and out of it at the moment of death and during certain crises of the body. People hear from it. People are spoken to by it. And the channels through which all of this happens have a structure and a logic that Bapuji, through divine vision, has long been able to describe.

What appears in these pages has been independently compiled and arranged by the Paramshanti Team, inspired by Bapuji's spoken teaching on this subject. The selection, wording and presentation are the work of the Team, and the spoken teaching has been refined into clear English prose for the sake of clarity and presentation. Where a particular Hindi or Sanskrit term is the precise word — and there are many such moments in this teaching — the term itself has been preserved and italicised, with a brief gloss at first appearance and a full definition in the glossary at the end.

We offer this book to readers who have wondered, often quietly, about what is happening when a relative seems to speak from the other side, when an image in a temple seems to answer, when a tantrik appears to know what could not be known, when a person near death returns with a description that turns out to be exact. Bapuji has explained these things, and explained them clearly. The hope is that this volume carries that clarity to those who have been waiting for it.

Chapter One

The Constant Communication Between Worlds

There is a quiet truth that lies behind almost everything Bapuji speaks of in this discourse, and he places it at the very beginning. The world we see is not a closed system. It is in continuous communication with another world we do not see — and that other world has the louder voice.

Bapuji states the law plainly: those who live in the subtle world run those who live in the physical world. This has always been so. It is not a recent arrangement. The sukshma jagat (subtle world) is not separate from us; it is constantly reaching into our affairs through countless small openings, through the thoughts that pass through our minds, through the people we move with, and through the spirits who enter the spaces and bodies they find unguarded.

To understand spirit communication, then, is to understand something that is already happening, every hour, all around us. It is not a rare phenomenon to be summoned through ritual. The tantriks (ritual practitioners who work with spirits) who summon spirits, the psychics who report from the unseen, the dying who suddenly speak to invisible visitors at the bedside, the dreamer who wakes with a clear instruction — these are visible moments of a communication that flows constantly underneath all of life.

Why this communication is so heavy now

Bapuji speaks of the present time as one in which the subtle world is unusually crowded. Within the range of the Earth, vast numbers of souls live in their three-element bodies — bodies of akash (ether), vayu (air) and agni (fire), without jal (water) and without mitti (earth). Each of these souls carries the impressions of the life it left. Each of them has unfinished business. Each of them is, in some way, looking for a body, a voice, a path back to expression.

Their numbers, Bapuji says, exceed the human population many times over, drawn from every dharm mat panth sampraday (every faith, sect and tradition). They speak many languages. They carry many beliefs. They press against the human world from every direction. To know how they speak to us is the subject of this book.

The natural law beneath it all

Whoever's hand weighs heavier on this Earth, Bapuji says, that is the hand that runs the world. At present, the subtle world's hand is heavier than that of the visible. This is a natural law — not a moral judgement, simply how things stand. The vayumandal (atmosphere) is tamopradhan (heavy with the dark quality of nature), and a heavy atmosphere is one in which the subtle world's voice is loud.

In the chapters that follow, we will look at the many channels through which that voice reaches us. The most direct of these is possession, when a spirit enters and speaks through a person — and it comes first. The most subtle of them — the silent communication of vibration that passes from a soul connected to its source — comes last. Between them lies the full range of what Bapuji has described.

♦ Insight: Spirit communication is not a rare event. It is the continuous flow that runs beneath the visible world. We meet only its more dramatic moments and assume the rest is silence.

Chapter Two

How a Spirit Enters and Speaks Through a Person

The most direct way a spirit communicates with the living, Bapuji says, is by entering a body and speaking through it. The mechanism is precise. The spirit lodges itself in some part of the host. From that lodging, it operates the host as one might operate a borrowed instrument. Through the host's mouth, it makes its demands. Through the host's eyes, it watches. Through the host's hands, it reaches for what it wants.

Where the spirit lodges

When a spirit enters a person, Bapuji explains, it does not stand in any one fixed place. It settles wherever the mind of the host is open. Sometimes it remains in the eyes. Sometimes in the head. Sometimes in the hands. Wherever the host's attention has weakened, the spirit slips in. The body of a human being holds many trillions of cells. A spirit, in its near-formless state, is small enough that an enormous number of them can occupy a single body if they wish. One human being can hold many spirits at once.

Within the subtle anatomy itself, the spirit can lodge at different depths. The sukshma sharir (subtle body) has seven coverings. A weak spirit lingers near the outer covering. A stronger one penetrates to the third or fourth covering. The most powerful sink to the fifth or even deeper, where the brahma rakshas (a category of stubborn, deeply lodged spirit) — the most stubborn category — can be found. The deeper the spirit, the harder it is to remove and the louder its voice through the host.

What the spirit asks for Bapuji has watched what spirits ask for many times in his life. The pattern is consistent. They speak to satisfy a vasana (an unfulfilled desire) — an unfinished desire that crossed over with them when they left their own body. A spirit who drank in life will demand a drink. One who eats meat will demand meat. Whatever indulgences bound a spirit in life, it will seek those same things through the host.

Bapuji recalls one such case in detail. A strictly vegetarian household was visited by a spirit of very different habits, who entered the house and possessed one of its members. Through the body of a person who in life would never have eaten such food, the spirit demanded non-vegetarian food. The household, helpless, complied. The spirit ate through the body until it had consumed an enormous amount — almost as much as the person's own body weight. Only then could the oja (the practitioner who removes spirits) hope to drive it out.

Such cases, Bapuji says, are not unusual. The spirit will not leave until it is fed. It speaks, through the host, until the household understands what it wants. Once the demand is met, sometimes it goes. Sometimes it does not. But this — the borrowed mouth speaking the spirit's demand — is the most basic form of spirit communication, and it is happening in countless homes.

Why this communication binds, even after it ends

There is a further point Bapuji insists on. Once a spirit has entered and spoken through a person, even if it leaves, a new karm bandhan (bondage of past actions, a binding tie) — a new bondage of action — has been formed between them. The spirit had no prior bondage with the human being it entered; the act of entering creates one. From that day, the spirit may return. The thread between them is now real.

The same principle applies, Bapuji says, when one visits places where spirits gather — graveyards, certain shrines, and other places where the dead are remembered. The spirits who reside there attach themselves quietly to the visitor and follow them home. From the next day onward, they begin to speak through whoever in the household is open. A household of one background, he notes, frequently hosts spirits of an entirely different background today; a spirit attaches wherever it finds an opening, regardless of the home it enters. Once the bond of karm bandhan is formed, the spirit knows the way back.

♦ Insight: When a spirit enters a person, it does not speak from outside. It speaks from inside, through the body it has borrowed, asking for exactly what it wanted before it died.

Chapter Three

The Borrowed Voice — When Spirits Use False Names

Bapuji says, spirits are great liars. He says it more than once, and he says it firmly. The person who lies in life becomes a greater liar after death. The maha-papi (deeply darkened, greatly sinful) soul — the deeply darkened soul — lies more freely than any human being. When such a soul enters a body and begins to speak, the household must understand that almost nothing that comes out of that mouth can be accepted at face value.

The names they borrow

The most common deception is the borrowed name. Through the host, the spirit will declare itself to be a deity. It will say: I am this devi (goddess). I am that devta (deity). I am Mahakal (a name of great power, often used for Lord Shiva). The names are taken because the names carry weight. A frightened household will obey Mahakal. A devoted household will obey a devi. So the spirit takes whichever name is most likely to produce obedience.

None of this is true. Bapuji is clear: a devi does not enter a household this way. The voice that claims to be a devi is, in nearly every case, an ordinary spirit using the name. Bapuji has spoken in another video, he reminds us, about a drinking spirit that loudly declared itself to be Mahakal — and then, in the same breath, asked to be given liquor. The name was the disguise. The hunger was the truth.

Frightening the household into compliance

The technique by which spirits secure obedience is fear. Once the borrowed name is stated, threats follow. The spirit will say: I will destroy you. I will harm this person. I will not leave until you do this. Once the household is shaken — once the nose is brought to the ground in fear, as Bapuji puts it — the spirit can ask for whatever it wants. Bring me an offering. Bring me food. Bring me a drink. Out of fear, the household yields.

It is for this reason, Bapuji says, that one finds bottles of liquor at the base of certain trees, cigarettes left at certain shrines, meat placed at certain spots. The notion that the offering will bring a blessing is the inverted form of the truth. The offering is being given because a spirit, claiming to be a deity, demanded it. The vasana (unfulfilled desire) of a soul who could not let go of these things in life is being satisfied through the gullibility of the living.

The spirit's reach is limited

The threats themselves, Bapuji notes, are usually empty. A spirit at this layer cannot do what it claims it can do. It cannot reach above two hundred kilometres into the subtle realm. It cannot open portals. It cannot produce real power. What it can do is speak through a borrowed body, frighten a frightened person, and arrange to be fed. That is the extent of its operation.

Yet that extent is enough to reshape entire households. Generations of families have arranged their lives around what a spirit, claiming a deity's name, has demanded through one of their members. Whole rituals are built on offerings made under this kind of pressure. To know that the voice may be borrowed is the first step in distinguishing real communication from false.

♦ Insight: A spirit borrowing a deity's name is a hungry being using a great word. Listen to what is being asked for. The asking, not the name, tells you who is speaking.

Chapter Four

Tantriks, Ojas and the Calling of Spirits

Outside the household, there are practitioners who make spirit communication their profession. The tantrik (ritual practitioner of esoteric arts) calls spirits. The oja (a folk practitioner who removes or summons spirits) calls spirits. The village dakla (a small drum used to summon spirits) — the small drum — is beaten, and the spirit is called into a body and asked to speak. Bapuji has seen this from childhood; he was drawn to such places as a boy and watched what was done.

How the spirit is summoned

The technique is straightforward. A practitioner with spirits already attached to him calls one into a host — sometimes a willing volunteer, sometimes a person from the household who is to be questioned. The drum beats. The spirit enters. The practitioner then begins to speak to it: tell us what you want, tell us who you are, tell us what is happening to this family, tell us what is to come. The spirit, lodged in the body, answers through the borrowed mouth.

Bapuji watched this many times in his village. He saw the spirit invited in. He heard its answers. And he reports, plainly, what he learned: spirits lie continuously in this setting. They lie as a matter of course. The dakla is beaten, the spirit speaks, and the household, eager for an answer, accepts what is said. Most of what is said is false.

Why so many predictions go wrong

There is a simple reason. The quality of the answer depends entirely on the quality of the spirit. If the practitioner is attached to a good soul, the answer may be roughly accurate. If the practitioner is attached to a low soul — and most are — the answer is whatever the spirit thinks will produce the response it wants. Often it is invented entirely.

Bapuji is unequivocal here. Many tantriks and ojas predict events that never come. Many describe past events in ways that do not match reality. The reason is not mystery. The spirit they are working with simply does not have the power to read what it claims to read. A weak spirit speaking confidently is still a weak spirit. The household leaves believing the prediction; the prediction was a guess.

The black thread and the protective amulet

Tantriks also distribute objects — black threads tied to the wrist, small amulets, knives placed under pillows, salt and similar items. Bapuji explains how these work. The thread itself does nothing. What protects the wearer is the spirit the tantrik attaches to the thread. When another spirit approaches the wearer and sees the thread already occupied, it recognises the occupation and turns away. The system, Bapuji says, is a system of spirits — a recognition between them — not a system of physical objects.

This is also why no such object can give permanent freedom. The bond between a person and a particular spirit is a karm bandhan. As long as the bondage remains, the spirit returns. The thread, the amulet, the temporary remedy, can hold the spirit at arm's length for a few weeks. They cannot remove the bondage that brought it in the first place. To do that, Bapuji says, requires yog (connection of the soul with the Supreme) — but that is the subject of the final chapter.

Bapuji's own observation as a child

Bapuji speaks of his own attendance at these gatherings as a child with a quiet matter-of-factness. He went where the spirits were called. He watched them lie. He watched the practitioners present their answers as if they were certainties. He watched the families nod and depart with what they thought was wisdom. And he came away knowing, even at that age, that not every voice from the subtle world is a voice worth heeding.

♦ Insight: The drum is beaten, the spirit comes, and the spirit speaks. But what the spirit says is only as true as the spirit speaking is real. Most of them are not.

Chapter Five

Long-Distance Communication Through Spirits

Bapuji speaks at one point of a particular kind of communication that has, in our era, taken a modern form. It is the consultation done over the phone — a tantrik in one country, a client in another, the question asked and the answer given without the two parties ever meeting. The mechanism by which this is possible, Bapuji says, is purely a mechanism of spirits.

How the spirit travels through the connection

When a phone connection opens between two locations, Bapuji explains, certain spirits can travel through it. They do not travel as physical signals; they travel in their near-formless nirakari (formless, incorporeal) state, which is so light that they can move from one place to another in an instant. America to Europe. India to America. Wherever the call reaches, they reach. Two or four spirits attached to the practitioner go to the location of the client. They examine the client's sukshma sharir (subtle body), read what is recorded there, and return — also in an instant.

Once the spirits have read the records, they pass the information to the spirits remaining with the practitioner. The transfer is not done over the phone wire. It is done directly, soul to soul, through the wireless medium that spirits naturally inhabit. The spirit beside the practitioner whispers into the practitioner's ear. The information emerges. The household at the other end of the call hears it as an accurate description of what is going on in their lives.

What is being read

What the travelling spirits read is the data already present in the client's subtle body. Every sukshma sharir carries a record. The first covering holds the events of this present life. Deeper coverings hold material that goes further back. Spirits with sufficient power can also read into the karan sharir (causal body) — the causal body — where the traces of many earlier lives are stored. The travelling spirit does not know what is happening; it reads what is already written.

This is also how, Bapuji says, prediction is sometimes possible. Within the subtle and causal bodies, certain near-future events are also recorded — events fixed by karm bandhan (bondage of past actions), written in advance. A spirit powerful enough to read those records can describe what is about to happen. Bapuji is careful here: not every spirit can do this. Most cannot. The bhoot (an ordinary spirit) does not have the power; the pret (a more powerful spirit) sometimes has it; the pishach (a spirit of even greater power), at the higher end, more often has it.

The earlier form — the rishis

Bapuji also notes how this contrasts with what was once a much higher form. In an earlier age, the rishis (great sages) and munis (silent sages) did not need spirits at all. They held a single sankalpa (an intention or thought of the soul) in their own minds, and the result followed. They did not sit at a phone. They did not consult anyone. The intention of a sato pradhan (purity-dominant, of the pure quality of nature) soul, sent forth from a centre of accumulated tapasya (spiritual austerity), accomplished what was needed. Around such rishis, sato pradhan souls assembled naturally, and through their cooperation the sankalpa took hold.

The modern phone consultation, Bapuji says, is the much-degraded substitute. Instead of a sankalpa sent through the air by a pure mind, it is a low-spirit messenger sent through a phone connection. The form has shrunk, the channel has narrowed, and the truth of what comes back is no longer reliable.

♦ Insight: Where once a rishi sent a single thought into the air and it reached its target, today a tantrik sends a spirit through a phone line. The form has diminished, and the reliability with it.

Chapter Six

How Spirits Read You — The Subtle Body, Causal Body and Aura

To understand how spirits seem to know things they could not know, Bapuji says, we must first understand what is recorded in us. The human being is a moving record. The aura — the ora (the subtle field around a person) — carries the trace of the present. The sukshma sharir (subtle body) carries the trace of this life. The karan sharir (causal body) carries the trace of many lives. A spirit which can read these layers seems, to the person sitting in front of it, to know things that should be impossible to know.

The seven coverings of the subtle body

The subtle body, Bapuji says, has seven coverings. Each one holds different material. The outer covering carries the events of the immediate life. As one moves inward, the layers hold material from lives further back. A spirit which can lodge itself only in the outer covering can speak only of recent matters. A spirit powerful enough to penetrate to the seventh covering can pull up records from a hundred lifetimes ago.

This is why, Bapuji says, certain practitioners claim to see a hundred past lives. The claim is not entirely false. A spirit operating through them has reached the seventh covering and is bringing up what is written there. The practitioner is not seeing it; the spirit is reading it and projecting it through the practitioner's awareness. To the listener, the effect is uncanny. The actual mechanism is straightforward.

The seven coverings of the causal body

Beneath the subtle body lies the causal body, the karan sharir, made of akash (ether) — alone. It also has seven coverings. Within these, the records of many lives are stored, including, for very old souls, records that go back kharab (one kharab equals one hundred billion) — hundreds of billions — of years. For a soul whose first form was made at the beginning of the Bramhand (Solar System), the data within is enormous. To read it requires reaching not the first or second layer but the seventh. Few spirits can do it; the great rishis whose third eye opened could.

The causal body, Bapuji emphasises, is also where the buddhi (intelligence) — the intelligence — lives. The mind of the soul, in his usage, and the causal body are essentially the same. To clean the causal body is to clean the mind. Spirits cannot easily reach this depth; only powerful ones can. Most operate at the surface, in the subtle body and the aura.

The aura — the surface that is most read

The aura, Bapuji says, is the outer surface of the subtle body. It carries the data of the immediate present and of events about to occur. The karan sharir feeds the sukshma sharir; the sukshma sharir feeds the aura. By the time something has reached the aura, it is close to manifesting. A spirit reading the aura can therefore describe what is happening now, and what is about to happen in the immediate days ahead.

This is what the ordinary psychic reads. The ordinary tantrik. The ordinary oja. They are not seeing into deep past lives. They are reading the surface. The surface is enough to describe present events convincingly, which is why so many psychics seem accurate at first hearing. The deeper they claim to go, the more carefully their words must be examined.

The whisper into the ear

There is also a particular kind of attached spirit traditionally called the karna pishachini (a spirit said to whisper into the ear) — the one who whispers into the ear. Such a spirit, attached to a practitioner, sits beside their head and dictates. The practitioner appears to know the answers; in fact, they are repeating what is being told to them, sentence by sentence. Bapuji describes this as one form of siddhi (a spiritual power or attainment) associated with these traditions. The spirit knows because it has read the subtle body of the visitor; the practitioner knows because the spirit has whispered.

The psychic and the video-call connection

Bapuji also describes a more general arrangement. When a visitor sits before a psychic, the psychic does not always need their own spirit attached. The visitor's relatives who are now in the subtle world — souls who knew the visitor in life — can themselves emerge from a distance, and a connection forms, almost like a video call between the subtle world and the psychic. They tell the psychic what the visitor needs to hear about the visitor. This, Bapuji says, is how communication of this kind works across faiths and across regions: in every tradition, helpful souls in the subtle realm cooperate with those who can receive them.

The subconscious and the dream

There is one more pathway by which the records become visible — the deep sleep state. When the conscious mind quiets and the subconscious opens, the records inside the subtle and causal bodies sometimes surface on their own. A spirit lodged in the seventh covering can also, while a person sleeps, bring data forward into the dream. People wake with memories of events from many lifetimes back, with knowledge they could not have had, with sights they could not have seen. The subconscious mind is the door through which the records emerge.

◆ Insight: What spirits seem to know about you is mostly what is already written inside you. They are reading the record. The depth of the spirit decides the depth of the reading.

Chapter Seven

Communication at the Moment of Death

Of all the moments in which the subtle world reaches across into the visible, the moment of death is perhaps the most intimate. Bapuji describes it directly. As the body falls away, the soul does not travel alone. Souls from the subtle world come for it. The principle that decides who comes is the principle Bapuji repeats throughout this discourse: anta-mati so gati (as the mind is at the end, so is the journey afterwards). Whoever the soul has remembered in life is who comes for it now.

The arrival of the receiving souls

If the dying person has been a devotee of a particular guru, the guru's circle in the subtle world is informed and arrives. If the dying person has loved a particular deity, the souls of that deity's circle arrive. If the dying person has lived only for vasana (unfulfilled desire), with no remembrance of anything higher, then spirits of similar nature gather around. The natural law is exact: like reaches towards like.

Bapuji uses an everyday word for these arrivals. They speak. They do not stand mute. They communicate with the soul that has just shed its body, as one would speak to someone who has arrived at a station from a long journey. They greet it. They explain to it what has happened. They reassure it. They lead it toward the place it is to go. This is communication of the most concrete kind — the soul has crossed over, the receiving souls speak to it, and it begins to listen.

The thirteen days near home

For the first thirteen days, until the religious rites are complete, the soul stays near its own home. It watches the household. It sees who weeps and who does not. It hears what is said. The receiving souls do not yet rush it on; they wait nearby. When the time comes, they speak again. They explain that the guru the person loved has an ashram above. They show the way. They lead the soul upward, and there it finds — often with relief — that the guru of its life on Earth is also present in the subtle world, in the same form, with the same teaching, in an ashram that mirrors the one below.

This, Bapuji says, is what the older traditions described as the arrival of the devdoot (a celestial messenger or angel) — the angel — to receive the soul at death. He uses a plainer word and calls them spirits also, because they are souls in the three-element body who have come to speak with the new arrival. Whatever they are called, what matters is that they speak — and that the soul, now without its body, listens.

The older system and the new Bapuji also describes how the system of these arrivals has changed. In earlier ages, the journey had a definite shape. The yamdoot (the messenger of Yamraj, lord of the dead) came to take souls to Yamllok (the realm of Yamraj); the devdoot came to take souls to swarg lok (heaven, the higher subtle realm); the journey took roughly forty-seven days. Yamllok was a real, populated region in the subtle realm. Souls were sorted there and sent on. That system, he says, has now grown old.

Today, the arrangement is the simpler one already described. Whichever circle the soul has loved arrives. There is no central station, no general clerk of arrivals. The communication at the moment of death is now a direct meeting between the departing soul and the company that already loves it. The older bureaucracy of the unseen has thinned away.

The communication that the soul itself receives

Once the soul has been received, the communication continues. At every layer above, sadhus and saints of the subtle world give it instruction. They show it where to go. They tell it what not to look at. They explain that to remember the lower world is to fall back into it, and that even a moment of looking back can pull a soul down through layers it has already crossed. The teaching at this stage is verbal, careful, and constant. The soul that listens rises. The soul that does not is gently held back, sometimes for a very long time.

♦ Insight: Whoever the soul remembers at the end is who comes to speak with it. The first words on the other side are spoken by exactly the company the soul has loved into existence.

Chapter Eight

Voices from Above — Saints, Gurus and Guidance

Communication from the subtle world is not only what travels downward into the lives of the living. It is also what travels upward — the voices of saints and gurus in the subtle realm reaching down to the soul that is rising, layer by layer, toward them.

The mirrored ashrams

Bapuji has seen this in samadhi (the deep absorbed state of meditation). He says it without elaboration: what exists in the gross world also exists in the subtle world — jo sthool jagat mein hai, vahi sukshma jagat mein hai. The ashrams of the gurus on Earth have ashrams above. The temples of Earth have temples above. The churches and mosques of Earth have their counterparts. Up to a vast range — Bapuji speaks of one crore (ten million) kilometres around the Earth, sixteen crore kilometres if measured from the Sun — the subtle layers contain a faithful reflection of every religious form below.

This is why, when a soul leaves a body, the guru it loved on Earth is found again above. The same form. The same ashram. The same teaching. The communication a disciple had with a guru in life continues, in some sense, after death. The guru appears to the soul; the soul recognises him; the relationship resumes.

Guidance at every layer

As a soul rises, Bapuji says, it does not rise alone. At every layer there are sadhus and sants who guide the next stage. The soul reaches the first ashram two hundred kilometres above the Earth. It is given there. It is told what to do. After a period, it is shown the way to the next layer, between five hundred and a thousand kilometres. There, more sadhus speak to it. They give instructions. They put it through deeper practice.

The conversation continues at one thousand to two thousand kilometres, then at ten thousand, then at a lakh. At every layer there is a teacher, and at every layer there is a particular instruction the soul receives. The most important of these instructions, Bapuji repeats, is one and the same: do not look back. Do not remember the maya you came from. To remember it is to fall back into it. Even an act of remembrance is enough.

Sadhus from every faith

Bapuji is careful to point out that these sadhus are not of one religion. The disciple should not assume that only the saints of his own tradition are above. The subtle world up to one crore kilometres holds sadhus and ashrams of every faith, mirroring what exists below. Every faith and tradition has its own teachers in the lower layers of the subtle world. Each soul finds the teachers of its own line. Each line teaches in its own way. As the soul rises higher, however, the lines begin to merge, and finally, in a layer that Bapuji says almost no one knows about, there is a region free of all religious binding — beyond every dharm bandhan (bondage of religion). There the teachers are of a different kind. They wear no markings of any tradition. They are beyond every form one would recognise on Earth.

How the guidance reaches downward

This communication does not flow only when a soul has died. Bapuji says that the gurus on Earth descend from the subtle world into physical incarnation. Their ashrams above are their original homes. They take birth here with their followers and re-establish their tradition for a time. While they live and teach below, they remain in connection with the subtle ashrams above. This is one of the quieter forms of spirit communication — not a dramatic possession or an oracle, but the ongoing background communication of a teacher with the source from which he came.

♦ Insight: Above every ashram on Earth there is its mirror in the subtle world. The teaching that began here continues there. The conversation never quite ends.

Chapter Nine

Near-Death Experience and the Travel of the Subtle Body

Many people who have come close to death return with descriptions of what they encountered — a long passage of light, a feeling of overwhelming peace, the sight of departed relatives, sometimes a message that they must return because their work is not yet done. Bapuji speaks of these experiences directly. They are real. They are also explainable.

How the subtle body slips out

The mechanism, Bapuji explains, is the temporary detachment of the subtle body. When a heavy anaesthetic is administered before a long operation, the sukshma sharir (subtle body) of an ordinary person sometimes cannot accept it. It slips outside the physical body. The same can happen during a heart attack of several minutes, during certain comas, during accidents in which the body is briefly inert. The subtle body loosens. It moves outward. It begins to travel.

In a coma, the proportion may be partial. Bapuji gives a rough description: perhaps twenty-five per cent of the subtle body remains with the physical, while seventy-five per cent moves outside. The portion that has left wanders. It travels around the room, around the hospital, around familiar places. When the time comes for it to return, it re-enters fully, and the person becomes conscious again. In Bapuji's explanation, this returning of the subtle body to the physical is, spiritually speaking, what underlies the experience of regaining consciousness.

Why the journey feels like light

As the subtle body rises from the surface of the Earth, it travels at very high speed. Fifty kilometres in moments. Five hundred. Sometimes much further. The travelling sensation itself — the rush, the brightness, the feeling of light all around — comes from this rapid passage through layers whose vibrations grow lighter as one ascends. The atmosphere of the lower world is heavy, full of negative vibration. The atmosphere a few hundred kilometres up is markedly cleaner. The atmosphere higher still, lighter again. The soul feels relief. The relief is real.

This is also why, Bapuji says, those who report near-death experiences speak of overwhelming peace. They have moved into a region in which the negative vibrations of the lower atmosphere have fallen away. They are travelling in their sukshma sharir, and the lighter the body, the higher the journey. Some travel a few kilometres. Some travel hundreds. A few travel thousands. The depth of peace they report corresponds to how far they have gone.

Meeting souls and receiving messages

While the subtle body is wandering, it sometimes meets souls. Bapuji gives one specific case described in this discourse — a woman who fell into water and remained there for a considerable time. As she rose, in her subtle body, she was met by a relative who had passed before her. The relative welcomed her, then told her something specific: your son will die when he is eighteen years old; you must return to Earth, you have work still to do.

She returned. She lived. Years later, when her son turned eighteen, he died exactly as predicted.

How was such a thing possible? Bapuji explains. The receiving soul in the subtle world had read the karmic record of the visiting soul. The death of the son was already written in the subtle and causal bodies. Souls of the subtle world, if they have sufficient power, can read these records and pass on what is written. The karm bandhan (bondage of past actions) had already determined the timing; the receiving relative simply read it and reported it.

This is, in its way, one of the most striking forms of spirit communication. A soul slips temporarily out of its body. It rises into the subtle world. It is met. It is given information drawn from records inside itself that even it could not access while in the body. It is sent back. The information turns out to be accurate. None of this is mystical, in Bapuji's framing. It is simply how the layers communicate when the gates are briefly open.

Watching the room from outside

Some who have such experiences do not travel far. They report instead that they watched their own operation from above the bed. They saw who entered the room. They heard what was said. When they re-entered, they remembered. Bapuji confirms that this is also a real phenomenon. The subtle body, briefly outside, is not unconscious. It can see. It can hear. It carries those impressions back when it returns. The household sometimes hears, in plain words, exactly what was said in the room while the patient was supposedly insensible. The patient was not insensible. The subtle body was outside, and it was listening.

♦ Insight: When the subtle body slips temporarily from the physical, it does not go silent. It travels, it sees, it sometimes meets, and in rare cases it brings back exact knowledge of things it had no business knowing.

Chapter Ten

Photos, Idols and the Voice in the Image

There is one further channel of spirit communication that Bapuji speaks about with particular care. It is the communication that flows through the photos of devis and devtas placed in homes, and through the murtis kept in temples. This too is a form of spirit communication, and a widespread one — but it is not the communication people imagine it to be.

How the spirit enters the image

When the atmosphere of a household is not full of true devotion, and when wandering spirits have entered the house, those spirits can also enter the photos and idols kept there. They take on the form of the devi (goddess) or the devta (deity) whose image it is. They begin to speak from inside the image, in the name of the deity. To the devotee standing before the photo, the deity appears to be answering. In fact, the spirit is answering. The image has become a borrowed mouth.

The reason this is possible at all, Bapuji says, is that in the heaviness of this age the original divine force does not always remain as strongly present in an image as it once did. Where an image no longer holds that living force, wandering spirits can enter freely. They take on the appearance of the deity. They operate from inside. This, in our times, has become widespread — in homes, in many temples, in many shrines.

The communication that follows

The communication that flows from such an image is, accordingly, not the communication of a deity. It is the communication of a spirit using a deity's form. The devotee who prays sincerely receives, in return, a voice that confuses the buddhi (intelligence of the soul) rather than clarifying it. The voice may guide. It may threaten. It may demand. It may instruct the household to perform particular rites or to bring particular offerings. None of this is the deity speaking. All of it is the spirit speaking, through the form it has occupied.

This is one of the inner reasons, Bapuji says, that an image which has lost its original force can cease to carry its sacred purpose. Once wandering spirits establish themselves inside such an image and grow their power, the communication that flows from it is no longer the communication of the original devi or devta; it is the communication of those who have occupied it.

Bhakti is not thereby useless

Bapuji is careful to add that this does not make sincere bhakti (devotion) useless. Real devotion, even in the presence of an occupied image, does its quiet work on the buddhi of the devotee. It makes the buddhi sato pradhan. A clean buddhi gives a clean mind. A clean mind eventually reaches for true knowledge of the soul and the Supreme. The fruit of bhakti, Bapuji says again and again, is gyan (knowledge of the soul and the Supreme). Across many lives, a sincere devotee finds his way to gyan-marg (the path of knowledge) in the end, regardless of what the image he prayed before was occupied by. The communication that genuinely matters is the inner one — between the devotee and the truth of his own soul. The voice in the image is, by comparison, a passing distortion.

◆ Insight: What seems to be the deity's voice in the image is, in our times, very often the voice of an occupant. The communication that matters is the one happening inside the devotee, not the one apparently coming out of the photo.

Chapter Eleven

The Highest Communication — Yog and the Vibration of Param Shanti

Bapuji ends this teaching by raising the question of what kind of communication is worth pursuing at all. He has just described, at length, the many forms in which spirits speak to the living: through possession, through borrowed names, through tantriks, through phones, through dreams, through readings of the subtle and causal bodies, through arrivals at death, through the voices in images. Most of these communications, he has shown, are unreliable, deceptive, or at best partial. What, then, is the communication that is worth seeking?

Yog is connection

Bapuji's answer is direct. The highest communication, the only one that is wholly reliable, is the communication of the soul with the Supreme. He calls this yog (connection of the soul with the Supreme). And he gives a very simple definition: yog means connection. Connection of the soul with the Powerhouse. When the connection is established, power flows from the source into the soul. The soul that receives this flow does not need any other channel.

The flow itself, Bapuji says, is communication of the highest kind. The Param Pita (the Supreme Father) sends Param Light, Param Tattva (supreme element), Param Prakash (supreme divine light) into the soul that has connected. These are not words. They are not instructions. They are substances — the substance of the Supreme — entering the soul that has opened itself. This is the communication that no spirit can imitate.

How yog ends spirit interference

As power enters the soul through this connection, it enters the karan sharir (causal body) and the sukshma sharir (subtle body) too. The aura changes. A dark or heavy aura — the kind that drew spirits in the first place — gives way to a golden or white aura. A spirit which approaches such a person sees the brightness and turns away. Some spirits, drawn to the brightness, are themselves released. They cannot stay near a soul which is in connection.

This is also how the underlying karm bandhan (bondage of past actions) — the bondage that brought the spirit in — is finally broken. Yog destroys vikarm (sin recorded in the causal body), the burden of past sin recorded in the causal body. As the record is consumed, the bondage with the spirit weakens. Eventually it breaks. The soul approaches the state Bapuji calls karmatit (beyond the law of karmic bondage). At that stage, no spirit can hold the person, because there is no longer any bondage by which to hold.

This is why, Bapuji says repeatedly, no external method gives true freedom from spirits. The thread, the amulet, the temporary remedy, the visit to the practitioner — these may relieve the symptom for a few weeks. They cannot remove the cause. The cause is the bondage in the causal body. Only yog reaches that depth.

Vibration as the highest form of speech

There is also a wider form in which this connected soul itself begins to communicate. As the soul fills with Param Light, the surroundings begin to receive its vibration. Bapuji says this in plain language: when the vibrations of Param Shanti (supreme peace) begin to spread through the atmosphere of a place, the spirits in that atmosphere fall quiet. Their work stops. They are released. The communication that flows from a soul in deep yog is not in words; it is in vibration. And the vibration of Param Shanti reaches every layer it touches.

This, Bapuji says, is the work of the Behad (boundless, beyond limits) soul. A Behad soul, established in atma swaroop (one's true form as a soul), holds within it the power of Behad ki kala (the supreme power of the boundless creation). When such a soul connects with the Param Pita and stands in its true form, the connection awakens. From a single sankalpa (intention or thought of the soul) of such a soul, the vibrations of Param Shanti radiate outward into bhu lok (the Earth realm), into bhuvar lok (the realm above the Earth), into swarg lok (the heavenly realm), into every layer of the subtle world above. They reach the spirits in their three-element bodies. They reach the souls in the lower regions. As the vibrations spread, the lower souls, drawn into the brightness, find mukti (release; the dissolution of a soul into its creator). They are released.

What the listener can do at home

There is a smaller, immediate practice Bapuji also recommends. Play videos of true gyan-yog (the path of knowledge united with connection to the Supreme) in the home. Play videos in which the path of yog is genuinely taught. The spirit attached to the household — for there is, in many households, such a spirit — will listen, just as a human being listens. If the teaching is real, it will find the teaching pleasant. It too will begin its purusharth (spiritual effort). It too will change. Some such spirits, Bapuji says, are released this way. Others move on to higher births. The household itself, meanwhile, is steadily cleaned of their company.

This, in the end, is the form of spirit communication that matters most. Not the forms in which spirits speak through us, but the form in which a soul connected to its source speaks back — silently, through vibration — to the spirits, to the atmosphere, and to the world that has been operating under their heavy hand.

♦ Insight: Of all the forms of communication with the unseen, the highest is the one that has no words. A soul connected to its source vibrates Param Shanti, and what hears it is freed.

Glossary

agni — The fire element. One of the three elements of the spirit body, dominant in many spirits.

akari — A subtle (not physical) form composed of supreme elements; the form of energy, not visible to the physical eye.

akash — The ether element. Its presence in the body is what gives the power to rise into higher subtle layers.

anta-mati so gati — As the mind is at the end of life, so is the journey afterwards. A Sanskrit principle Bapuji refers to repeatedly.

ashram — The dwelling and teaching ground of a guru. Bapuji says every ashram on Earth has its mirror in the subtle world.

atma — The soul. The true self. Eternal, formless in its original state, the source of energy in living beings.

atma swaroop — The true form of the soul; the state of being established in one's true self.

aura / ora — The subtle field around a person. It carries the data of the present and of events about to occur, and is the surface most often read by spirits and psychics.

Behad — Beyond limits, boundless. Used by Bapuji for the vast creation beyond the multiverse and for the souls fit to know it.

Behad ka Param Pita — The Supreme Father of the boundless creation. The ultimate source from which Param Light flows.

Behad ki atma — A Behad soul. A soul constituted of Param Prakash and Param Maha Tattva — a soul of very high power, capable of channelling Param Light into the world.

Behad ki kala — The supreme power of the boundless creation, accessible to a soul established in atma swaroop and connected to the Param Pita.

bhakti — Devotion. The path of the heart, in which the soul reaches towards its chosen deity.

bhakti marg — The path of devotion. Bapuji says the fruit of bhakti, across many lives, is gyan.

bhoot — A spirit of the most common kind, formed from a soul that died with desires unfulfilled. Bhoot have less power to read records than pret or pishach.

bhu lok, bhuvar lok, swarg lok — Successive layers above the Earth in the subtle world.

brahma rakshas — A category of stubborn, deeply lodged spirit, sometimes formed from a soul that had knowledge but acted wrongly.

Bramhand — Solar System. The dimension of creation in which our Earth is situated.

buddhi — Intelligence. In Bapuji's usage, the buddhi of a soul lives in the causal body.

chudail — A category of spirit, often associated with female form.

dakini — A category of spirit. One of the harsher forms a soul may take after death.

dakla — A small drum used in village rituals to summon spirits into a body.

devdoot — An angelic figure who, in the older system, came to receive souls at death and lead them to swarg lok.

devi, devta — Goddess; deity. Spirits frequently borrow these names when speaking through possessed bodies.

dharm bandhan — Bondage of religion. The subtle layer beyond all such bondages is, Bapuji says, free of the markings of any tradition.

dharma, mat panth sampraday — Religion and its sects, schools and traditions.

guru — Spiritual teacher. The guru one follows on Earth is found again above, in the subtle world's mirror ashram.

gyan — Knowledge — particularly of the soul and the Supreme.

gyan marg, gyan-yog — The path of knowledge, in which the soul comes to know its creator. Videos of true gyan-yog, played in a household, will reach the spirits attached there as much as they reach the people.

ishta dev — One's chosen deity, worshipped throughout life.

jal — The water element. Absent from the spirit body.

kaam, krodh, lobh, moh, ahankar — The five afflictions: desire, anger, greed, attachment, ego. What the human being carries, the spirit carries.

karan sharir — The causal body. Composed of ether element only; the storehouse of the soul's karmic record across many lives. It has seven coverings, like the subtle body.

karm bandhan — The bondage of past actions. The thread that ties one soul to another. As long as it remains, the spirit returns.

karmatit — Beyond karma. The state in which the soul is freed from all karmic bondages and no spirit can hold it.

karna pishachini — A particular kind of attached spirit, traditionally said to whisper into the ear of the practitioner.

loka / lok — A layer or dimension of creation.

Maha Bramhand — Galaxy. The next dimension of creation above the Solar System.

Mahakal — A name of great power often borrowed by lying spirits to frighten the household into compliance.

mitti — The earth element. Absent from the spirit body.

mukti — Release. A spirit that comes into the brightness of a soul filled with Param Light may itself be released, attaining mukti.

murti — A consecrated image. Wandering spirits, in our times, frequently enter murtis and operate from inside them.

nirakari — Formless. The spirit, in its lightest state, is so close to formless that it can travel between continents in an instant — even through a phone connection.

oja — A practitioner who removes spirits or summons them. Their reliability depends entirely on the quality of the spirit attached to them.

Param Light, Param Prakash, Param Tattva — Supreme light, supreme divine light, supreme element. What flows into a soul that has connected, in yog, with the Param Pita.

Param Maha Bramhand — Universe. The dimension of creation above the Galaxy.

Param Pita — The Supreme Father. The master creator. The source of all Param Light.

Param Shanti — Supreme peace. The original state of the soul; also the vibration through which the heaviness of this hour can be lifted and the spirits in it released.

pishach — A category of spirit, more powerful than bhoot, capable of deeper readings of the subtle and causal bodies.

pret — A category of spirit, between bhoot and pishach in power. Pret can read more than ordinary bhoot can.

purusharth — Spiritual effort. Even a spirit, Bapuji says, can perform purusharth and rise to higher births.

rishi, muni — The great sages of an earlier age, who could send a single sankalpa across the air without need of a phone or a spirit messenger.

samadhi — The state of deep absorbed meditation in which Bapuji has himself observed the workings of the subtle world.

sankalpa (also sankalp) — The intention or thought generated by a soul; the determination or affirmation of the soul. A pure soul's sankalpa, sent into the air, can accomplish what a spirit messenger and a phone now do. The power inherent in this is called sankalpa-shakti.

sato pradhan — Of the pure quality of nature. A sato pradhan soul has a clear, bright inner state. Around such a soul, helpful spirits gather naturally.

siddhi — A spiritual power. Some siddhis, Bapuji notes, are simply attached spirits whispering the answer.

subconscious mind — In Bapuji's usage, the door through which records from the subtle and causal bodies emerge — particularly during deep sleep, where dreams may carry knowledge from many lifetimes back.

sukshma jagat — The subtle world. The realm in which spirits live and through which the visible world is governed.

sukshma sharir — The subtle body. Composed of akash, vayu and agni. It has seven coverings, each holding records of different depths.

tamopradhan — Of the dark quality of nature. A heavy atmosphere, a heavy soul. The condition in which the subtle world's hand becomes heaviest in the running of the visible world.

tantrik — A practitioner who works with spirits — summoning them into bodies, consulting them, distributing protective objects. Their answers are only as true as the spirit working with them is reliable.

tapasya — Spiritual austerity.

vasana — An unfulfilled desire that survives the body. The vasana drives the spirit; the spirit speaks through the host to satisfy it.

vayu — The air element. Dominant in the spirit body.

vayumandal — The atmosphere — physical and subtle together. The vibrations that move through it shape what the world becomes.

vikarm — Sin committed by a soul; recorded in the karan sharir until destroyed by yog.

Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay — The institution founded by Bapuji in 1997 in Chenpur, Ahmedabad.

yamdoot, devdoot, Yamlok — The figures and place of the older system: yamdoots came to take souls to Yamlok and beyond, devdoots came to lead them to swarg lok. Bapuji says this older system has now grown old.

Yog, Yog Bal — Connection — the connection of the soul with the Powerhouse, the Supreme. Yog Bal is the power that flows through this connection.

“Gyan Daan Maha Daan”

Sharing Knowledge is the Highest Charity

— Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

Beyond the visible world lies a silent realm constantly communicating with humanity.

In Spirit Communication, the profound teachings of Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel reveal how souls, spirits, subtle energies, dreams, near-death experiences, and unseen vibrations influence human life.

This book explores the hidden mechanics of spirit communication, the journey of the soul after death, the mysteries of subtle worlds, and the ultimate path of liberation through Yog and Param Shanti.

A rare spiritual exploration into the unseen dimensions of existence — written for sincere seekers of truth.

“The highest communication is not through words, but through vibration.”
