ABOUT BAPUJI

Bapuji (full name: Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly called “Dadaji” by the younger generation) was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. However, he spent his childhood in another village named Ambasan, also located in the Mehsana district.

In the early part of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realizing the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers to realize their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times, he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy (CA), he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law (LLB) degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, he established a spiritual institution called “Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay” in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world, filled with suffering and disorder, into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt. Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as “Maa,” worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to 18 hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realized through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of superconsciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji’s teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the types of celestial creators across different dimensions, the creation of our solar system, galaxy, and universe, and most importantly, the transcendental knowledge of the multiverse and realities beyond it. His knowledge is supremely profound and is intended for highly evolved seekers, referred to as “behad souls.” According to Bapuji, these “behad souls” will play a key role in transforming this mortal world into an eternal divine realm.

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

“Gyan Daan Maha Daan”

(Sharing Knowledge is the Highest Charity)

Share to the maximum extent with all.

— by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

Of all the questions a human being can ask, the question of the mind is among the most important. We spend our whole life with the mind, yet we rarely understand it. We do not know where it came from, where it lives, or why it behaves as it does. And because we do not understand it, we remain at its mercy.

This book gathers Bapuji’s teachings on the mind into a single, simple, and complete journey. It begins where the mind itself begins — in fact, before the mind begins, in the soul’s original formless state, where there was no mind at all. From there it follows the mind’s creation, its bondage through karmic record, its different forms across the worlds, and finally its mastery and return to silence.

Every word here is drawn faithfully from Bapuji’s own spoken discourses. Nothing has been added from outside, and nothing of his meaning has been changed. The only work done has been to arrange his words into a calm, clear order so that even a complete newcomer can follow the path step by step.

Read this book slowly and peacefully. Let each chapter settle before moving to the next. The mind that learns to understand itself is already beginning to become free.

CHAPTER ONE

What the Mind Is, and Why It Must Be Understood

Among all the questions a seeker can ask, few are as important as this one: what is the mind? We live with the mind every moment. We think with it, we worry with it, we plan and remember and dream with it. Yet very few people ever stop to ask where this mind came from, where it lives, and why it behaves the way it does.

Bapuji teaches that the mind is not a small or ordinary thing. The mind has tremendous power. If the power of the mind were fully awakened — if even a fraction of its true strength were brought to life — a single soul could transform the entire world through the power of affirmation if the soul is awakened to its true potential.

But for this to make sense, we must first understand the mind correctly. Most people believe the mind is something inside the brain, or that it is simply the flow of thoughts. Bapuji explains it differently. The mind is not the body, and it is not the brain. The mind belongs to the soul. To understand the mind, we must first understand the soul, because the mind is inside the soul and moves according to what the soul carries within it.

This book follows the mind from its very beginning. We will see that the mind was not always present in same state. We will see how it came into being, how it became heavy and weak, and how it can be made silent and powerful again. This is not ordinary knowledge. This is the supreme knowledge of the mind as Bapuji has revealed it.

“If you awaken one hundred percent of the mind’s power, you can transform the whole world through a single thought.”

CHAPTER TWO

The Three States of Mind

Bapuji explains that the mind has three functions, or three states. These are the conscious mind, the subconscious mind, and the unconscious mind. Understanding these three is the beginning of all mastery over the mind.

The Conscious Mind

The conscious mind is the waking mind—the instrument through which we think, speak, analyze, and interact with the external world. It governs our awareness during our waking state, yet it is restricted by the reach of the senses. Though indispensable for daily life, it represents only a narrow window into the immense depths of human consciousness.

The Subconscious Mind

The subconscious mind becomes active in the transitional state between wakefulness and sleep, when full alertness has faded but deep sleep has not yet begun. In this half-conscious state, deeper impressions, insights, and intuitions emerge from within. Unlike the conscious mind, which is confined to the physical senses and the material world, the subconscious mind operates in a broader and subtler dimension of awareness. It serves as a bridge between the soul and the outer mind, accessing deeper layers of knowledge, intuition, and spiritual perception. While the conscious mind thinks and analyzes, the subconscious mind perceives and receives, making it the intuitive gateway to the soul's inner wisdom.

The Unconscious Mind

The unconscious mind is associated with a state beyond awareness of both the physical world and the subtle realm accessed by the subconscious mind. When all external perceptions, thoughts, and mental activities cease, the soul enters its deepest state of consciousness, where its true potential can be realized. This is the most profound and hidden layer of mental existence—a state of pure divine consciousness. In this state, the soul transcends the limitations of the individual mind and connects with the infinite power of the Supreme Soul, its Creator. Through this sacred union, the soul draws immense spiritual energy, wisdom, and peace, enabling deep inner transformation, renewal, and self-healing.

These are not three separate minds but three distinct depths of the same mind, each representing a different level of awareness and consciousness. The mind itself is an instrument of the soul, rooted within its vast and timeless essence. Understanding how these three states function is the first step toward realizing the extraordinary depth of our inner being. As we journey from the conscious to the subconscious and finally to the deepest unconscious state, we begin to discover the immense, multidimensional reality that lies within the soul and its profound connection to the Divine.

CHAPTER THREE

Where the Mind Lives

If we want to know the speed and power of the mind, we must first ask: where is the mind? In what does it reside?

Bapuji reveals a profound spiritual truth: the mind does not contain the soul; rather, the soul contains the mind. The soul—the Atma, the Rooh—is the conscious, eternal being residing within the physical, insentient body. Within the soul exist three interconnected powers: Man (Mind), Buddhi (Intellect), and Sanskar (Impressions or Nature). The mind is the instrument that thinks, desires, and experiences. Within the mind operates the intellect, the faculty of discernment that guides and directs thought. Deeper still lie the sanskars—the subtle impressions, tendencies, and accumulated memories carried by the soul across its journey. These hidden impressions shape the intellect; the intellect guides the mind; and the mind directs action in the physical world. Thus, a person's thoughts, decisions, character, and destiny are ultimately rooted in the sanskars embedded within the soul itself. For a sincere seeker, this understanding is transformative: true spiritual progress does not come merely from controlling thoughts, but from purifying the deeper impressions that give rise to them. When the sanskars are purified, the intellect becomes clear; when the intellect becomes clear, the mind becomes peaceful; and when the mind becomes peaceful, the soul begins to experience its true nature and its living connection with the Supreme Source. The path to spiritual awakening is therefore an inward journey—from actions to thoughts, from thoughts to intellect, from intellect to sanskars, and from sanskars to the radiant essence of the soul itself.

There is a divine order within the soul: the mind depends upon the intellect, and the intellect depends upon the sanskars. The mind thinks, the intellect decides, and the sanskars silently shape those decisions. These three—Mind (Man), Intellect (Buddhi), and Sanskars—are inseparable and always function together. Wherever the mind is present, the intellect and sanskars are present as well. Therefore, the key to transforming one's thoughts, actions, and destiny lies not merely in controlling the mind, but in purifying the sanskars that guide it from within.

This is why the mind cannot be understood on its own. It is woven into the very fabric of the soul. When the soul is pure and strong, the mind is clear and powerful. When the soul is covered and weighed down, the mind becomes restless and weak. The existence of mind cannot be traced without presence of soul.

The mind is not a product of biology alone — it is the soul made conscious. Without the soul, there is no witness behind thought, no meaning behind perception, only hollow machinery. What we call the mind — its capacity to wonder, to reflect, to feel the pull of conscience — cannot arise from matter by itself. Awareness that recognizes itself, thought that questions its own existence, points unmistakably to something beyond the physical. The soul is not something the mind has; it is what the mind is.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Jo apni atma hai, soul hai, rooh hai, uske andar mann hai.”

“Within your own soul, your rooh, the mind resides.”

CHAPTER FOUR

How was Mind There in the Beginning

---

Here Bapuji reveals something that very few have ever heard. In the soul's original, formless state — its nirakari state — the mind was in its purest, luminous and powerful form, not a single trace of desire present at all.

When the soul was first created, when it came into being in its pure formless nature, there was no record of any action within it. The soul was completely free. There was no burden, no bondage, no stored memory of deeds. And because there was no record, there was no mind. The mind had not yet been formed.

This is true no matter how great the soul's power. Whether a soul is of ten kala, of a hundred kala, or even a behad soul of immeasurable power, in its first pure formless creation there was no karmic bondage, and therefore no record, and therefore no mind.

Bapuji has said this many times in his discourses: "This mind — where did it come from?" When the soul was fully clear, when its creation was purely formless, there was simply no mind in it. The mind, then, is not the soul's original nature. Mind is something that started to shape into a separate entity other than soul with the journey of soul. The mind was not originally separate from the soul; it gradually emerged as a distinct faculty of thought and desire as the soul accumulated experiences and impressions throughout its eternal journey. The path of spirituality is the return journey—where the mind, purified of all desires and distortions, once again becomes a transparent expression of the soul's original purity, power, and divine consciousness. To understand the mind, we must understand how it was born.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Jab atma nirakari hoti, to mann nahi aata. Pehle mann tha hi nahi.”

“When the soul is in its formless state, the mind does not arise. In the beginning there was no separate mind at all.”

CHAPTER FIVE

How the Mind Was Created

We have to understand If the mind was not present in the soul's original formless state, then how did it come into being? Bapuji explains that the gradually mind takes distinct shape gradually, as the soul starts it journey after its creation. Gradually mind covers up the soul's original nature and power.

The soul, in its original state, is formless, pure, and boundless — the mind does not exist there as a separate entity. Yet as the soul embarks on its journey through creation, something begins to take shape around it. Layer by layer, experience by experience, the mind gradually crystallizes — not as the soul's essence, but as its covering. What was once infinite awareness slowly clothes itself in thought, desire, memory, and identity. This is the profound tragedy of the mind: it was never the soul's true nature, yet it grows so thick, so consuming, that the soul forgets what it was before the mind arrived. The original power, the original stillness, the original light of the soul becomes buried beneath the very instrument that was meant to navigate existence. The mind, born of the soul's journey, ends up obscuring the very source it came from — and the greatest spiritual work of any being becomes this: to see through the mind, back to the soul that existed before the mind was ever formed.

The soul moved, little by little, from the formless nirakari state into the akari state — a subtle form made of supreme elements, not visible to the physical eye. From the akari state it came further down into the sakari state — taking on a form within the world of the five elements, the mortal world.

As the soul entered into action and took on physical form, it began to perform deeds based on sense organs. And the moment the soul began to act through thought, word, and deed, those actions started to be recorded in causal body. This recording is what created the structure and movement of the mind. That's why Bapuji says that mind is nothing but causal body (karan sharir) of soul. This causal body was not at all existed before at the time of creation of soul but it was gradually

In its formless creation the soul had no karmic bondage and so no record. But once it became akari and then came into bondage through action, the record began to gather. According to the record that formed, the mind was shaped. Step by step the soul moved from formless, to subtle form, to gross form — and step by step the mind was built from the record of its own thoughts/deeds.

This is the great truth: the mind is the product of the soul's own actions. The soul created its own mind through its own deeds, across countless lifetimes. The mind is not given from outside. It is woven from within, out of the soul's own record.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Nirakari se dheere dheere akari bana, akari ban ke karmabandhan mein aaya, to uska record aata gaya, aur us record ke hisaab se mann bana.”

“From the formless it slowly became subtle, and in that subtle form it entered into karmic bondage; the record gathered, and according to that record the mind was formed.”

CHAPTER SIX

The Causal Body — The Storehouse of the Soul

Where is this record stored? Bapuji explains that it is stored in the causal body — the karan shareer. The causal body is the subtle storehouse that holds the entire record of the soul's actions.

Within the causal body lies everything the soul has done through thought, word, and deed, across many births. And it is this causal body that creates the mind. When the causal body forms the mind, the mind then moves according to whatever is recorded within the causal body.

This is the key to understanding why we think the way we do. The mind does not think randomly. The mind follows what is stored in the causal body. Whatever karmic accounts are recorded there come forward and shape the movement of the mind. The mind is simply running on the basis of its record in causal body.

Bapuji teaches that the influence of the soul's recorded thought is so deep that even the dreams that come in sleep arise from the causal body. The thoughts that surface in dream are, in large part, caused by the memory recorded in the causal body. The soul's own stored impressions affect what appears in dream. This is why the mind brings up old memories and old impressions, both in waking life and in sleep — it is reading from its own storehouse.

The mind, then, is not separate from the soul's inner record. The mind is the visible movement of an invisible record. Change the record, and the mind changes with it.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Karan shareer hi mann ko create karta hai, aur kaaran shareer ke hisaab se hi mann chalta hai.”

“It is the causal body that creates the mind, and the mind moves only according to the causal body.”

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Coverings Upon the Soul

The soul does not lose its freedom in a single moment — it loses it gradually, through the accumulation of coverings known as aavaran. In its original state, the soul is free, luminous, and unbounded. But as it enters the field of action, each deed, each desire, each attachment begins to deposit a layer over its pure nature. These coverings do not come from outside — they are drawn by the soul's own actions, its own entanglements with the world. One-layer invites another, and over time, what was once an open, radiant being finds itself wrapped in the weight of its own karma. The tragedy is not that something was done to the soul — it is that the soul, through its own journey, became the architect of its own bondage. Aavaran is not punishment; it is consequence. And within this understanding lies the seed of liberation — for what has been covered by one's own actions can, through conscious effort and inner purification, be uncovered once again.

Upon the pure soul, the first covering to form is that of the supreme element, the param mahatatva. Above that forms the covering of supreme ether, the param akash. Above that, the coverings of supreme air and supreme fire — param vayu and param agni — and further coverings beyond these. Through its deeds the soul gathered these layers, and the original freedom of the soul became hidden beneath them.

These coverings determine the quality of the mind. A soul covered with heavy karmic layers has a heavy, restless mind. A soul whose coverings are light and refined has a lighter, clearer mind. The mind, therefore, is tied directly to the soul's past karmic journey. Whatever the soul has carried, the mind reflects.

The causal body, the great causal body, and the supreme great causal body are successive layers of gross and subtle coverings that gradually formed around the soul during its long journey through creation. These accumulated veils obscured the soul's original purity and divine consciousness, making spiritual awakening a journey of returning to its pristine, eternal state. And when at last the soul awakens and rises and becomes formless again, these coverings do not simply vanish; they remain as subtle layers above the formless soul. This is why Bapuji says that even the formless state can still carry subtle coverings and subtle record. We will return to this remarkable point later in the book.

CHAPTER EIGHT

Why Every Soul Has a Different Mind

If we look around, we find that no two minds are alike. Every person carries a different pattern of mind and thought. Some minds are calm, some are restless; some are bright, some are clouded. Why is this so?

Bapuji explains that it is because every soul carries a different record. Each soul has travelled its own journey through countless births, and each has gathered its own particular record in its causal body. Above all each soul has a different creator bearing different power and nature (sanskaar). Since the mind follows the causal record, and since every soul's record is different, every soul's mind is different. This is why different people fall into different categories of mind.

Souls do not all emerge from the same origin — they come from different dimensions of creation, each carrying a distinct spiritual potency. This potency of a dimension of creation as well as soul is measured in kala — the intrinsic power a soul holds at its source. The higher the dimension, the greater the kala, the closer the soul to its original freedom. As the soul descends through the dimensions of creation, that kala does not vanish — it gets buried. The dimension a soul comes from is not merely its birthplace; it is the measure of its strength. Our own paramdham is of one kala. The great cosmos, the maha paramdham, is of ten kala. The Paramdhaam of universe is of sixteen kala; the great universe of twenty kala, and so on, rising higher and higher. The multiverse is of a hundred kala. Beyond these are worlds of a thousand kala and more.

A soul carries the record of the world from which it originally came. Every soul carries within it a record — not of its experiences alone, but of the very dimension it originally came from. A soul born of a hundred-kala dimension carries a hundred-kala record, a hundred-kala mind — vast, deep, and far-reaching in its inner capacity. A soul from a ten or twenty-kala dimension carries a mind of that measure. The mind, in this sense, is not a blank slate shaped only by life — it is a reflection of the soul's original creative range. This is why one mind can perceive what another cannot, why one being carries a depth that another simply does not hold. The difference between minds is not merely of intelligence or experience — it is of origin. The reach of the mind extends precisely as far as the dimension from which the soul first arose. This is why the inner depth and reach of one mind can be so different from another.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Jahan se aatma aayi hai, uska poora record uske paas hota hai — sau kala se aayi to sau kala ka mann.”

“The soul carries the full record of wherever it came from — a soul from a hundred-kala world has a hundred-kala mind.”

CHAPTER NINE

---

How the Mind Loses Its Power

The mind is energized by the soul. Its power flows from the soul's own light. Yet most people find their mind weak, scattered, and tired. Why does the mind's power fade?

The mind, like any source of energy, can be drained — and the first way it loses its power is through excess thinking. When the mind runs without rest, generating thought after thought in endless motion, it burns through its own energy. Speed without stillness is not strength — it is exhaustion. The faster the mind races, the weaker it becomes. Overthinking does not sharpen the mind; it depletes it. Just as a river that spreads too wide loses its depth and force, a mind that thinks too much loses its clarity and power. Rest is not laziness — it is the mind's most essential source of renewal.

The second — and deeper — drain on the mind is negative thinking. While excess thinking exhausts gradually, negativity drains with alarming speed. Every negative thought pulls energy out of the mind and releases it into the gross material world, which acts as a vast sink, absorbing and consuming it endlessly. The gross world feeds on negative energy, and the mind that dwells in negativity unknowingly feeds that world at its own cost. Positive thinking builds strength slowly; negative thinking destroys far faster. To protect the mind's power, one must first protect the quality of one's thoughts. This is why a single day of fear, anger, or despair can leave a person feeling completely emptied, while it takes long and patient effort to rebuild inner strength.

There is a simple law at the heart of this. The mind becomes weak when the soul becomes body-conscious — when the soul forgets its true self and identifies with the body, with fear, with attachment. And the mind becomes powerful when the soul becomes soul-conscious. The condition of the mind follows the condition of the soul.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Zyada sochte hain, negative sochte hain, to mann ki gati zyada chalti hai aur mann ki shakti khatam ho jaati hai.”

“When we think too much and think negatively, the mind races, and its power is destroyed.”

CHAPTER TEN

The First Step — “I Am a Soul”

If the mind has lost its power, how is it restored? Bapuji teaches that the very first step is the realization: I am a soul.

Before any technique, before any practice, the soul must first realize its own nature. “I am not this body. I am the atma, a point of conscious light.” This realization is the beginning of all mastery over the mind. Soul consciousness is the first step to control mind.

When the soul turns inward and becomes aware of itself, its inner light begins to return. And as the soul’s awareness grows, the mind grows powerful again. The strength of the mind is simply the power of the soul flowing through it. When the soul recovers its power, the power of mind is also restored with it.

This is why Bapuji places such emphasis on rising above body-consciousness, ego, and worldly record. As long as the soul is sunk in the body consciousness and its concerns, the mind stays weak and reactive. The moment the soul stands in its own truth, the mind begins to come back to life. To truly overcome the distraction of mind, the soul must rise above body-consciousness.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mann ki shakti badhaane ke liye, pehle atma ko anubhav karo — main atma hoon.”

“To increase the power of the mind, first experience the soul — I am a soul.”

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Food, Conduct, and the Quality of Mind

Bapuji teaches that the quality of the mind is also shaped by how we live. Two things in particular affect it directly: the food we eat and the actions we perform.

There is an old and true saying: as is the food, so becomes the mind. Sattvic food — pure, light, and clean food — helps create a peaceful and positive mind. When the food is sattvic, the mind too becomes good, which means it becomes positive. Heavy or impure food clouds the mind; pure food clears it.

Good actions also strengthen the mind. When we do good deeds for others, the mind grows stronger. Pure thinking, wise living, and positive karma all support a strong mind. Bapuji explains the chain simply: good food supports a good intellect, a good intellect supports the pure mind, and so the mind's power rises.

Yet none of this happens on its own — it demands discernment. Bapuji reminds us that viveka, the power to distinguish rightly, must guide every thought, word, and deed. Positivity is not a mood; it is a discipline — a conscious, daily choice to think cleanly, speak cleanly, and live cleanly. The mind is rebuilt not in a single moment of resolve, but through the patient, steady practice of clean food, clean conduct, and clean thought, sustained day after day. A strong mind is not given — it is built, carefully and deliberately, by one who has learned to live with awareness.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Jaisa ann khaate ho, waisa mann banta hai.”

“As is the food you eat, so the mind becomes.”

CHAPTER TWELVE

Purity — The Real Meaning

Bapuji teaches that purity — pavitrata — is understood differently in every tradition. Each path gives it its own meaning. So he explains what purity truly means, across the soul, the body, and the mind, intellect, and sanskars.

The purity of the soul matters most. When we transform our inner qualities and habits (sanskaars), the soul grows stronger — and as the soul becomes pure, the body naturally follows. Over many lifetimes, the soul has wasted its energy through endless negative thinking, until it reached its lowest state (tamopradhaan), weighed down by the worst kind of thoughts and ignorance. Through these negative connections, the soul got deeply trapped in the consequences of its own actions. And when those consequences arrive, the soul experiences pain and suffering. But here is the key understanding: whatever comes before the soul — every situation, every difficulty — is only the result of its own past actions. Nothing that happens to us belongs to anyone else. It is always, and only, our own account coming back to us.

Many people believe that purity means overcoming lust, and so they leave household life behind, thinking that is enough. But there is a subtle danger in this approach. When lust is forcefully suppressed rather than truly removed, its energy does not disappear — it simply shifts and transforms, most commonly into anger. This is why people who forcefully suppress desire are often found to be quick-tempered and irritable. Energy cannot be destroyed; it can only change its form. So true purity is not about blocking one vice by force. It is a complete inner state in which no negative energy remains in the soul at all — not lust, not anger, not greed, not attachment, not ego. These five vices are not just habits of the mind; they are deeply recorded in the causal body, the root layer of our being. They cannot simply be pushed down or covered up. They must be completely erased — deleted from within.

The Real Meaning of Brahmacharya

Brahm refers to the formless, supremely pure state of consciousness. To realize oneself as a pure soul—the child of the Formless—is to experience Brahm. In ancient times, seekers practiced “Aham Brahmasmi” (“I am Brahm”) and devoted their lives to awakening higher consciousness, yet many struggled to become firmly established in their formless nature because the practical knowledge of living in soul-consciousness was not widely understood. Bapuji teaches that true Brahmacharya is not merely physical discipline but the continuous awareness of one's formless soul nature while living, working, walking, and performing all actions as a Karmayogi. This is true purity. Beyond this lies Behad Purity—the realization of the soul's Aadi-Anaadi Swaroop, its original and eternal nature, knowing who it was in the beginning and who it has always been beyond time.

Household Life and the Art of Living

The Gita honours the householder's life — grihastha ashram — as the greatest of all paths. Many have misled people into believing that marriage is a downfall or an obstacle to spiritual growth. Bapuji corrects this misunderstanding clearly: the truth is the exact opposite. To live within family life while remaining inwardly established as the soul, constantly remembering God, is in fact the highest karmayogi life of all. Those who carry this awareness become co-workers in the transformation of the world — their ordinary daily actions carry an extraordinary spiritual power. What truly matters, therefore, is not whether a person marries or renounces, whether they live in a home or a monastery. What matters is one simple thing: whether they are living as the soul — awake, aware, and connected to their true nature in every moment.

What we eat and drink directly shapes the quality of our mind. The food we consume influences our thoughts, and even the water we drink has an effect on our inner state. Foods that are heavy and tamasic in nature — such as onion and garlic — lower the mind's vibration and are best used only when the body genuinely needs them for medicinal purposes. This is why yogis eat very little — not out of deprivation, but as a conscious choice to keep the body light and under control, so that the mind remains clear and focused. Anyone who wishes to live a truly yogic life, or even to find a healthy balance between worldly responsibilities and spiritual growth, must first have two things: the higher knowledge of who they truly are as a soul, and the practical art of living well. Without this foundation, neither the diet nor the discipline alone can bring lasting transformation.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

The Awakened Mind and the Power to Change the World

We now come to the highest potential of the mind. Bapuji teaches that as the soul awakens to its true nature and becomes soul-conscious, the mind undergoes a profound transformation. The mind that was once restless, weak, and scattered becomes focused, powerful, and deeply stable. Drawing strength from the awakened soul, it develops extraordinary clarity, concentration, and spiritual power—far beyond what is normally experienced in everyday life.

When the soul remains steady in its own self-awareness, the power of the mind naturally rises. And as the soul becomes more and more fully conscious, the mind's power grows so vast that thought itself becomes creative — it carries the ability to shape reality. At the point of full awakening, the mind is no longer just a thinking tool; it becomes a force powerful enough to transform the world. A single pure thought, arising from a mind that is fully alive and fully conscious, is enough to set great change in motion. This is the true potential of the human mind — not just to think, but to create, heal, and transform the whole creation.

This is precisely why the soul must use the power of the mind for the welfare of the world — not for fear, not for attachment, and not for small, petty desires. When an awakened mind sends out thoughts of well-being, thoughts of Paramshanti, thoughts of infinite and boundless peace, those thoughts do not simply stay within — they go out and work upon the world, quietly and powerfully transforming it. Through the combined force of mind power and soul power, the soul can rise to a truly divine quality of being. And this inner rising is not separate from the world's transformation — it is part of it. The final transformation of the mind is itself a contribution to the transformation of the world. When enough souls awaken and think purely, the world cannot remain as it is now.

The journey of mastering the mind is not merely a personal pursuit. A soul that gains control over its mind and fills it with peace, purity, and positive thoughts naturally becomes a source of strength and transformation for others. Such a soul radiates calmness, wisdom, and spiritual power, uplifting the environment around it. This is the highest purpose of the mind and the reason its mastery is so important on the spiritual path.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Why the Negative Mind Must Be Overcome Now

Bapuji teaches that the work of overcoming the negative mind is not something to be left for some distant tomorrow. In the present age, it is the most urgent task of all — for the soul itself, and for the world.

According to spiritual understanding, we are living in Kaliyug, the age in which the world has gradually declined from the purity and harmony of Satyug through the stages of Sato, Rajo, and finally Tamo qualities. As this decline has progressed, sorrow, conflict, selfishness, and suffering have increased in both individuals and society. People often wonder why there is so much unrest within themselves and in the world around them. The reason is that both the world and the souls living in it have moved away from their original state of purity and have become influenced by lower qualities, resulting in ignorance, division, and suffering.

The soul itself has grown very weak. Originally made of supreme light, the soul has gradually lost its power as it passed through the ages — descending slowly until it reached its heaviest, most darkened state, known as tamopradhan. This is not a failure but a natural part of the journey. And it is precisely because the soul has fallen this low, and the mind has grown so heavy with the accumulated record of countless lifetimes, that this moment becomes the most critical of all. This is exactly the time when the negative mind must be overcome and to return to pure pristine state of soul consciousness. The way to do this is not through force or struggle, but by drawing in param prakash — the divine light — and allowing that light to work from within, gradually changing the mind, lifting its heaviness, and restoring the soul to its original brightness.

A truly high-quality soul, when it sees the pain and suffering of the world, does not simply complain or blame. It turns inward and thinks: "I must change." This is the mark of a mature soul. Bapuji teaches a profound truth here — the transformation of the world does not begin outside; it begins with the transformation of one's own mind. Change the mind first, and everything else follows. The outer world is only a reflection of the inner. This is why a soul that truly understands the times we are living in does not wait, does not delay, and does not look for change elsewhere. It turns immediately and wholeheartedly to the most important work of all — winning its own mind, clearing it, purifying it, and making it an instrument of light.

Bapuji speaks of the urgency very plainly. This, he says, is the time for gyan daan maha daan — the time to receive and to share this knowledge. Later, this time will slip from the hands. Very little time now remains.

The day will come when a soul will not even find the time to build its own destiny; and those who remain caught in maya will find that maya cannot help them then. Bapuji points to a recent sudden worldwide hardship as a kind of sample, a warning — a sign urging souls to reform even now, while there is still time.

And there is a deeper reason this moment matters. Bapuji teaches that souls have come to this earth now from different dimensions of creation — from galaxies, from universes, from great universes, and beyond. Even souls of immeasurable behad power are here, searching for this knowledge. For all of them, this is the time to awaken, to overcome the negative mind, and to begin the journey back to their original source. The mortal world is being prepared for transformation, and the awakened mind is the instrument of that change. To win the mind now is to take one's place in the transformation of the world.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

The Mind in the Mortal World and the Immortal World

Bapuji explains that the mind is not the same everywhere. The mind of the mortal world and the mind of the immortal world are as different as the earth and the sky.

The mortal world — mrityu lok — is the gross world of the five elements, the world where death exists. The mind here is the sakari mind, the mind in gross form. It is heavy. It is filled with the record of the gross body, with fear, with attachment. It is bound to the concerns of survival and possession in this gross world. This is the mind most people know.

As the soul rises to higher realms, the mind too becomes lighter and more refined. The heaviness and grossness that weigh down the ordinary mind begin to fall away. The higher the realm the soul inhabits, the more subtle and pure the mind becomes — it sheds layer after layer of density. And in the highest of all realms, the immortal world — amar lok — the mind is of an entirely different quality altogether. It carries none of the burden, weight, or darkness that the mortal mind carries through its earthly journey. It is free, light, and clear in a way that is difficult to even imagine from where we stand now. This tells us something beautiful — that the refinement of the mind is not just a spiritual practice, it is the natural direction of the soul's journey upward.

There is a fundamental difference between a mind shaped by enjoyment and a mind shaped by knowledge. In a bhog yoni — a life or realm focused purely on pleasure and enjoyment — the mind remains absorbed in sensory experience. It does not turn inward. There is no seeking, no remembrance of God, no reaching toward higher truth. That kind of mind simply consumes and enjoys, without any deeper awakening. But the mind that walks the path of supreme knowledge is different in its very nature. It is not just thinking differently — it is operating from a different level altogether. This turning of the mind toward knowledge, toward God's remembrance, toward the understanding of the self, is something that is only possible on this highest path. A mind shaped by knowledge and a mind shaped only by enjoyment are not the same instrument — they are worlds apart.

So the same word, “mind,” points to very different realities depending on where the soul stands. To rise is to lighten the mind; to fall is to thicken it.

The Mind Across the Higher Worlds

Bapuji describes a vast ladder of worlds, and the mind changes its quality at every step. Let us follow the ascent.

Above the earthly realm lies bhu-bhu lok, the subtle three-element world. Above that is swarg lok, the heaven world. The souls who reach swarg lok have come there by the fruit of their good deeds, into a world of enjoyment. Yet Bapuji points out that even the lord of the three heavens is a great enjoyer, immersed in pleasure, for swarg lok is a bhog yoni — a realm of enjoyment rather than of knowledge and austerity.

Beyond the ordinary higher realms lies maholok — where the minds of great sages reside, refined and elevated far beyond common experience. Rising further still are janlok, taplok, and satyalok, each representing a progressively higher stage of consciousness and purity. And beyond even these are the supreme abodes — Brahmapuri, then Vishnupuri, then Shivpuri, and finally the highest of all, paramdham. Each of these is not merely a different place, but a different category of existence altogether. Each realm has its own atmosphere, its own vibration, and its own quality of mind. The souls that dwell in each are at a corresponding stage of their own inner development. This tells us that the journey of the soul is vast and layered — a great rising, step by step, from the heaviest and most dense, all the way to the most supremely light, free, and pure.

As the soul rises through the realms — from maholok to janlok, from janlok to taplok, and onward toward Brahmapuri — both the mind and the subtle body undergo a slow and steady transformation. Nothing happens all at once; it is a gradual refinement at every step. By the time the soul reaches Vishnupuri, the supreme element within it has risen to fifty percent — the soul is halfway home to its original purity. In Shivpuri, that supreme element reaches one hundred percent. Here, in the highest etheric atmosphere of Shivpuri, something extraordinary happens — the entire accumulated record stored in the causal body, the deep impressions and karmic imprints gathered across countless lifetimes, is completely deleted. The causal body itself dissolves and comes to an end. And with that, the soul stands fully free — clean, clear, and pure once more, restored to its original state, as it was in the very beginning.

At every level of the journey — from swarg lok through maholok, janlok, taplok, Brahmapuri, Vishnupuri, Shivpuri, and all the way to paramdham — the mind is of a different quality. No two levels are the same. With each rise, the mind becomes less burdened, less dense, more subtle, more refined. When seen as a whole, the entire ascent of the soul is essentially one great journey of the mind — a gradual, steady purification that continues level by level, realm by realm, until in the highest abodes the mind becomes utterly clear, completely still, and perfectly pure. The whole ascent is, in one sense, the gradual refinement and purification of the mind, until in the highest realms it becomes utterly clear.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

The Formless Mind

Now we come to one of the most subtle teachings in all of this knowledge. Most people assume that when the soul rises into the formless state, the mind simply disappears. Bapuji says clearly: it is not so.

“Do not say that when the soul goes into the formless state there is no mind. There is a formless mind.” Even in the nirakari state, a mind is present. It is a different kind of mind — the formless mind — but it exists. And so do a formless intellect and formless sanskars. Wherever there is mind, the intellect and the sanskars are present together with it.

One might wonder — how can the mind still exist if the soul has risen beyond the three qualities, beyond sato, rajo, and tamo? When the soul ascends into paramdham, it becomes trigunatit — beyond all three gunas. And yet, even in this formless state, certain subtle coverings remain above the soul. First there is the covering of the param mahatatva, then above that the param akash, and around the param akash the accumulated record of the surrounding atmosphere also gathers as a layer. A soul that has journeyed through the great cosmos — through galaxies and universes — still carries these extraordinarily subtle coverings above its formless nature. And because these coverings hold record within them, a subtle mind still exists, even at this supreme level. The mind, in its most refined form, persists as long as even the faintest covering remains. Only when every layer is dissolved completely does the soul stand in its absoluteness — pure, and free from any memory or impression.

Even in the formless state, subtle memories remain. The record does not vanish completely — as the soul rises through higher and higher realms, the record grows lighter and more refined, but a subtle covering and a subtle trace still persist. Yet as the soul approaches the very highest state, something profound happens — the mind does not merely become quiet, it becomes so utterly pure and still that it is no longer "mind" in any ordinary sense. It dissolves into pure consciousness itself. The highest state of mind is not a refined version of thinking — it is consciousness in its most absolute form, awareness without any stain, without any movement, without any record. At this supreme point, mind and pure consciousness are no longer two different things. They become one. The mind, in its final and highest state, is pure consciousness — and pure consciousness alone.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

"Nirakari mein bhi mann hota hai — yeh mat kaho ki nirakar mein gaye to mann nahi hota."

"Even in the formless state there is a mind — do not say that in formlessness there is no mind."

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Where Ego Comes From

A natural question arises — if even the formless state has a subtle mind, does it also carry ego? Bapuji answers this with great clarity: ego is not part of the pure original soul. It does not belong to the soul's true nature at all. Ego — ahankar — belongs to the elemental gross world. It arose when the fire element appeared, as part of the subtle creation that came forth through the thoughts of Brahma. When the world was formed and the elements came into play, the ego-element entered with them. It is a feature of elemental creation, not of the pure formless soul. This is a vital distinction to understand. The mind, the intellect, and the sanskars do travel with the soul even into the formless realms, in increasingly subtle form. But ego is tied specifically to the elemental world — it came with creation, and it belongs to creation. This makes ego one of the greatest obstacles on the spiritual path, because where even the smallest trace of ego remains, supreme knowledge cannot fully enter and stabilise within the soul. Ego blocks the light. And so the soul's deepest and most original nature is completely free of it. The subtle world, moving through karmic motion and desire, creates a recording mind that carries ego along with it. But the pure soul, at its very origin, stands beyond ego altogether. To return to that origin — ego-less, pure, and free — is the ultimate aim of all this knowledge.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

The First Thought — Sankalp and the Chain of Creation

If the formless state has a subtle mind, then there must be some seed of thought within it. Bapuji calls this the sankalp — the subtle resolve, the first faint thought from which creation flows.

Consider the formless Brahm. At a certain point, a resolve arose within: "Let me create a cosmos." With that single thought, the formless took its very first step toward form. A faint, delicate sankalp — a seed of intention — stirred within the formless, and from that stirring, creation began. This raises a natural question: if the formless state is said to be free of resolve and free of distortion, then where does this subtle resolve come from? How does a thought arise in what is supposed to be beyond thought? Bapuji answers clearly — it is the lightest possible seed of thought, arising not from nowhere, but from the record held within the soul itself. The record stirs, and creation follows.

But then the deeper question arises — where does that record, that resolve, originally come from? Here Bapuji traces a remarkable and extraordinary chain. The resolve for creation within formless Shiv comes from Mahashiv — a higher source above. The resolve within Brahm comes from the maha brahm above it. The resolve within the maha brahm comes from the param maha brahm above that. And so the chain rises — from the param maha brahm to the supreme beyond the supreme, beyond and beyond, ascending without end. The thought always comes from above. Each creator receives the impulse to create from a higher source, and passes the sanskar of creation downward. Creation itself, at every level, is not self-generated — it is an echo of something higher, a transmission flowing down from source to source, from the infinite above into the world below.

This is why sarjan and visarjan — creation and dissolution — never ceases. The one who builds a cosmos also dissolves it; creation and dissolution turn endlessly. There is partial dissolution, dissolution, the dissolution of an age, and the great dissolution — the mahakal pralay. And all of this, Bapuji says, is held as record in the Brahm and that record transmits to its creation. So intent of creation is a natural habit exists in all beings right from formless Brahm to ordinary Jeev in mortal world. The resolve to create and the resolve to dissolve both arise from the record stored within Brahm. It is, in a sense, computerised — everything held within, running on its own account, whether in the cosmos, the galaxy, or beyond.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Sankalp tab nikalta hai jab andar recording hota hai.”

“A resolve arises only when there is a record within.”

Creator and Creation Are Always Two

From the question of the first thought comes a deep teaching about reality itself. When does the sense of “creator” and “creation” as two separate things arise? Bapuji speaks here of dvaitvad — duality — and advaitvad — non-duality.

There are two realities. You are a soul, and there is the one who created you. You and your creator are two distinct and separate entities. Bapuji says plainly that this duality is the ultimate truth: the creator creates, and you are the creation. The teaching that all is one, that the soul fully merges and becomes identical with the creator, is, in his words, incomplete knowledge.

Bapuji explains it with care. To remember the Supreme as one’s own Father — “He is my supreme Father, and I am His child” — this is the true relationship. The creator creates; you are His creation; you may become like Him in quality, but the child cannot simply become the Father and dissolve into Him. In the highest realms, when a soul reaches the paramdham, the creator dwells there and the creation also dwells there in its formless state — but the two remain distinct entities. The creation does not merge into the creator unless the creator wills it. After dissolution the existence of a soul ceases permanently which, we call as “Mukti”.

Bapuji teaches that the common analogy of a wave merging into the ocean applies only within the physical and mortal world; it does not describe the reality of Paramdham. In the highest spiritual realm, the Creator and the soul remain distinct, each with its own eternal identity. True self-realization is not the loss of individuality but the direct experience of one's true soul nature (Atma Swaroop), along with the recognition of one's eternal origin and relationship with the Supreme Father. This supreme truth is not attained through intellectual debate, but through the living experience of soul-consciousness.

The Outer Mind and the Inner Mind

Bapuji teaches that within us the mind works in two directions. There is an outer mind and an inner mind. Both belong to the same soul, but they face opposite ways.

The outer mind is the mind that thinks about the world — about society, about external events, about all that happens outside. It is turned outward, caught in the affairs of the world. This is the mind that most of us live in most of the time.

The inner mind is the part of the mind that turns inward toward the soul, seeking silence, self-awareness, truth, and spiritual understanding. It helps the soul rise above negative and unnecessary thinking, guiding it toward wisdom, peace, and right action. While the outer mind is often distracted by the world and scattered among countless desires and concerns, the inner mind brings focus, clarity, and a deeper connection with one's true self.

Bapuji teaches that the inner mind becomes illuminated when the soul experiences its true identity. The simple realization, “I am a soul,” awakens an inner light that brings clarity, peace, and spiritual awareness. As the soul becomes connected with its own true nature, the inner mind grows stronger and more refined, naturally guiding the individual away from confusion and error toward truth and wisdom. This is called true enlightenment. The purification of the mind begins when the soul recognizes itself, for it is the soul's own light that gradually clears and transforms the mind.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“‘Main atma hoon’ — yahi antarmukhi mann ko khilata hai.”

“‘I am a soul’ — this is what makes the inner mind blossom.”

The Soul as Witness, and Why the Mind Wanders

Bapuji teaches that the soul is the Saakshi-Drashta—the witness and observer of all its coverings, including the subtle body, the causal body, and the various layers that formed during its journey through creation. A witness can observe only that which is separate from itself; therefore, the soul is distinct from these bodies and coverings. In its original formless state, none of these layers existed. As they gradually developed over time, the soul remained unchanged and separate, simply observing their influence and activity. To realize oneself as the witness is to understand that the soul is not the body, the mind, or its coverings, but the conscious being that observes them all.

When true self-knowledge awakens and a person realizes, “I am a soul,” a profound understanding begins to emerge: the mind is the source of both happiness and sorrow. Driven by desires, the mind constantly runs after temporary and illusory things, believing that fulfillment lies outside itself. Yet every attachment and unfulfilled desire becomes a cause of suffering. This is why it is said, “Ichha Matram Avidya”—desire itself is a form of ignorance. When the soul deeply understands this truth, it gradually gains mastery over the mind and becomes free from the cycle of desire and sorrow.

The mind wanders because it lacks true knowledge of the self and reality. It mistakes the temporary and ever-changing material world for the ultimate truth and seeks fulfillment in possessions, status, relationships, and praise. Over countless lifetimes, the mind has developed the habit of looking outward for happiness, unaware of the deeper spiritual reality that lies beyond the physical world. As a result, it continues to chase fleeting things, believing they will bring lasting satisfaction, while remaining restless and unfulfilled.

The remedy lies in strengthening soul-consciousness — atma-bhaav — and gently reducing body-consciousness — deh-bhaav. Even the simple phrase "my body" contains a profound truth within it: if this is my body, then I am clearly not the body itself. I am the soul — the one who owns it, inhabits it, and uses it. As this awareness grows deeper and more natural, a witness consciousness begins to develop on its own. The soul starts to observe life with greater clarity, watching thoughts and experiences from a place of inner stillness rather than being swept away by them. By consciously experiencing one's own formless soul-nature while living in the body, and by drawing spiritual power from the Supreme, the mind gradually becomes peaceful, detached, and free from its restless wandering. And as true knowledge deepens further, a natural dispassion — vairagya — arises toward the temporary world. This is not a forced renunciation or a turning away from life. It is a quiet, natural understanding that dawns from within — the recognition that lasting fulfilment cannot be found in worldly attachments, because they are temporary by nature. True and lasting fulfilment lies only in the soul's own eternal nature, which was always there, waiting to be remembered.

Why the Mind Runs During Yoga

Many ask why the mind runs here and there even during yoga and meditation. Bapuji answers gently: it is because the old thought is stored deep within, and it cannot be controlled in a few days. Yoga is the work of long and patient practice. The ancient yogis withdrew into the Himalayan caves and practised in solitude for many years before they attained. Here, the practice is the direct experience of the soul-form.

Without dispassion, yoga cannot truly connect the soul to pure consciousness. The mind must first be made dispassionate — and the way to do this is through deep and genuine understanding of knowledge. When true knowledge enters the intellect, it naturally produces dispassion. And as that dispassion settles and stabilises in the intellect, the mind gradually becomes still enough to connect with pure consciousness — the Supreme. This is the sequence: knowledge first, then dispassion, then the mind becomes a clear and open channel through which the connection with pure consciousness flows naturally and deeply. So the path is simple, even if it takes time — dip again and again into the ocean of knowledge, listen deeply, practise yoga consistently, remain dispassionate, and do not worry. There is no need for anxiety or impatience. Go slowly. The mind does not transform in a single day, and that is perfectly fine. Little by little, step by step, the mind comes under control. Its restlessness fades, its distortions clear, and as the connection with pure consciousness deepens, a deep, steady, and unshakeable peace settles within — quietly and naturally, like light filling a room at dawn.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mann hi dukh aur sukh ka kaaran hai; ichhaon se hi dukh banta hai.”

“The mind itself is the cause of sorrow and joy; it is from desire that sorrow is born.”

Winning the Mind — Yoga, Connection, and *Manmanabhav

How is the restless mind finally won? Bapuji's answer is direct and clear: the mind cannot be controlled by effort or force alone. No amount of willpower, discipline, or struggle will truly still the mind. Every attempt to forcefully silence the mind only creates more resistance, more tension, more noise. The mind is not won by fighting it — it is won by transcending it. And the only way to transcend it is through yoga — through a living, genuine connection with the Supreme, with pure consciousness itself. When the soul turns toward the Supreme and that connection becomes real, something shifts that no amount of personal effort could achieve. The mind, which could not be stilled by force, becomes naturally still in the presence of that higher consciousness. It is not suppressed — it is absorbed. It is not controlled — it is transformed. This is Bapuji's core teaching: mind control is not a battle to be won alone. It is a connection to be made — with the Supreme — and in that connection, the restless mind finds, at last, its home.

The Gita gives one simple and profound key: Manmanabhav — "give your mind to Me." Bapuji explains that this single teaching contains the entire secret of mind-mastery. The mind, left to itself, is endlessly restless. Like a mad monkey leaping from branch to branch, like a wild horse that cannot be reined in, it keeps running — from thought to thought, from desire to desire, from worry to worry. It cannot be tamed by struggle. It cannot be silenced by force. Every attempt to wrestle the mind into stillness only stirs it further. There is only one thing that truly works — surrender. When the mind is offered to the Supreme, when it is lovingly given over to pure consciousness rather than held and fought over, it finds what it was always searching for. It finds rest. It finds home. "You give Me your mind," says the Lord — not as a demand, but as an invitation. And in that giving, in that simple and total surrender of the mind to the Supreme Being, the restlessness dissolves, the running stops, and a stillness arrives that no personal effort could ever have produced. Manmanabhav is not a technique. It is a relationship — the deepest relationship the soul can have.

Bapuji teaches that spiritual transformation follows a clear and natural sequence. First comes true knowledge (Gyan), which enables the soul to practise yoga in the correct way. Through this connection, spiritual power begins to flow into the deeper layers of the soul, gradually cleansing the causal body of accumulated negative karmas (Vikarmas). As these karmic impressions are purified, the soul becomes lighter, the mind grows peaceful and stable, and genuine mastery over the mind becomes possible. Without this process of knowledge, yoga, power, and purification, lasting control of the mind cannot be achieved.

Bapuji teaches that the thoughtless state is the deepest healing state for the causal body. When the mind becomes completely quiet and free from the continuous flow of thoughts, the deeper layers of the soul begin to heal and cleanse themselves. This inner silence brings profound transformation, creating greater peace, clarity, and spiritual strength. Therefore, the goal is not to struggle against the mind, but to connect it with higher spiritual power and allow it to become naturally still, for it is in that stillness that the deepest purification and healing take place.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

Silence, Solitude, and the Protection of Mind Power

---

Bapuji gives very practical guidance for protecting the mind's power in daily life. The mind, he teaches, recovers its strength in silence and solitude, and loses it in noise and crowds.

Solitude helps the mind recover its strength. When a soul withdraws into silence, the mind is able to gather itself and rebuild its energy. Crowded places and constant social noise, on the other hand, weaken the mind. The endless stimulation of busy, noisy surroundings scatters the mind's power and drains it.

For this reason, Bapuji advises fewer words, softer speech, and less unnecessary contact. Speaking less, speaking gently, speaking truth, and avoiding needless social entanglement all protect the mind's power. He warns too against showmanship and the craving for social approval, for these weaken inner stability. The more a person performs for others and depends on their applause, the more the inner ground is shaken.

As soul consciousness grows stronger, something beautiful and natural begins to happen — the mind becomes desireless. The restless reaching, the constant craving, the endless search for more, quietly settles down on its own. There is no force involved, no suppression, no struggle. It simply dissolves, because the root cause of all that restlessness — the forgetting of the self — is being healed. The soul, resting in its own awareness, no longer needs the noise, the validation, or the approval it once chased so desperately in the outer world. It has found something far greater within itself. And in the silence and solitude that soul awareness naturally brings, the mind stops wandering and comes home — back to its own original strength, its own original stillness, its own original peace. This is not emptiness. This is fullness. The mind that has come home to the soul lacks nothing and needs nothing. It is, at last, at rest.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

Desire, Vasana, and the Deletion of the Causal Record

---

At the root of the restless mind lie desire, attachment, and craving. Bapuji teaches that desire and vasana are rooted in the records of the causal body. They are not abstract feelings; they are stored impressions, recorded deep within.

Because vasana lives in the causal body, it must be deleted from the causal body. It cannot be merely suppressed on the surface; the record itself must be cleared. And this deletion happens through power — through the supreme light and the connection with the power-house, the Supreme source. The param prakash and the connection with the Almighty source dissolve the inner impurity.

Bapuji explains this process with beautiful clarity. When the soul abides in its own true form and draws power from its Creator, that power does not simply enter the soul and remain there. It flows directly and purposefully into the causal body — the deepest layer of the soul's being, where all accumulated karmic record is stored. In the beginning, when the soul first starts to make this connection, the power that comes in goes straight into the causal body and begins, slowly and steadily, to clean it. Layer by layer, impression by impression, the recorded wrong actions that have been gathered across countless lifetimes are dissolved and destroyed by this incoming divine power. Gradually, the causal body becomes lighter, clearer, and eventually completely empty. And when the causal body is fully empty — when there is no record left, no accumulated burden, no stored karmic weight — something extraordinary follows naturally. No karmic bondage remains. And with no bondage remaining, the mind, which was restless precisely because of that weight, becomes completely still. The stillness of the mind, therefore, is not achieved by controlling the mind directly. It is the natural result of the causal body becoming clean and free.

When the soul receives divine light, the mind becomes pure. When the causal body receives that power, thoughts themselves become lighter — less heavy, less compulsive, less driven by old patterns. And as this process deepens, something remarkable unfolds in the soul's higher state — the mind becomes automatic, peaceful, and non-reactive. It is no longer pulled this way and that by old desires, old wounds, or old habits. It no longer jumps at every provocation or chases every craving. It simply rests — clear, calm, and undisturbed. This is not a state that has to be maintained by constant effort. It arises naturally, as the inevitable result of the causal body being cleansed and emptied of its accumulated record. This is the deep healing that the deletion of the causal record brings — not just peace of mind, but a complete inner freedom.

The soul is no longer driven from within by what it once was. It is free, at last, to simply be what it truly is.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Power seedha karan shareer mein aati hai, aur dheere dheere vikarma vinaash ho jaate hain, mann shaant ho jaata hai.”

“The power goes straight into the causal body, the recorded wrong actions are slowly destroyed, and the mind becomes still.”

The Mind, the Aura, and the Vibrations of Paramshanti

Bapuji teaches that the mind and the aura are deeply connected. The state of the mind shows in the aura, and the condition of the aura affects the mind. They move together.

When a soul, firmly abiding in its own true form, begins to radiate the vibrations of Paramshanti — supreme peace — those vibrations do not leap directly into the world. They move through layers. First they pass through the causal body, then through the subtle body, then outward into the aura that surrounds the soul, and from there they flow out in all directions, reaching as far as the soul's power can carry them. Within the very word Paramshanti lives param light — supreme light. And this is not a coincidence. The vibration of peace and the descent of supreme light are not two separate things happening side by side. They are one. They are joined together at their very source and cannot be divided. A soul that radiates true peace is simultaneously radiating divine light, and a soul that carries divine light is simultaneously a source of deep and genuine peace. The strength and quality of these vibrations will naturally differ from soul to soul, depending on the level of power and purity each soul carries. But one thing remains constant — wherever true peace flows, supreme light flows with it. They always travel together, inseparable, as two expressions of the same divine reality.

The reach of these vibrations depends on the power of soul that is soul's kala. A soul of one kala sends out a one-kala vibration of supreme light; a soul of ten kala, a ten-kala vibration; a soul of a hundred kala can send the vibration of supreme peace across the entire multiverse. And when the soul draws power from the Almighty, the vibration travels even further and stronger.

Bapuji teaches that Paramshanti vibrations do not remain confined within the soul alone. They fill the subtle body, the aura, and the mind, and from there they naturally spread outward — into the home, into the family, and into society at large. A soul that is genuinely established in peace becomes, without even trying, a source of peace for everything and everyone around it. But Bapuji also speaks of something more — protection. A soul of immeasurable power has the ability to seal its own aura, creating a shield of divine light around itself. Bapuji advises doing this three times a day, through a simple and sincere resolve — much like a prayer — "let my aura be sealed." This is not a ritual; it is an act of conscious intention. Negative entities and dark energies cannot bear the presence of a bright, powerful white aura. When the aura shines with genuine soul power, such energies are weakened, diluted, and simply cannot enter. The soul remains protected, naturally and effortlessly. On the other side of this truth lies an equally important teaching — negative thoughts do not merely disturb the mind. They create illness, inner disorder, and deeper karmic bondage. Positive thoughts, soul awareness, and true knowledge, however, work in the opposite direction. They heal. They cleanse the causal body, lift the soul's vibration, and restore the natural order of health, clarity, and peace from within.

“Paramshanti shabd mein hi param light hoti hai — dono saath mein jude hue hain, alag nahi ho sakte.”

“Within the very word Paramshanti there is supreme light — the two are joined together and cannot be separated.”

Behad and the Worlds Beyond Imagination

Bapuji uses the word behad — the limitless — throughout his knowledge. Many seekers ask: what is the difference between behad, and the behad of behad? And what lies beyond even that?

Bapuji answers honestly that these realities lie far beyond the reach of the ordinary mind, and therefore they cannot be fully captured or explained in words. He offers what guidance he can, pointing as far as language is able to reach. There are, he says, infinite higher dimensions of creation — dimension upon dimension, each beyond the last, stretching into what is called behad kala, boundless existence. And above even these infinite dimensions exist still higher dimensions that are so vast and so far beyond ordinary comprehension that they can only be called the behad of behad — a greatness beyond greatness, a boundlessness beyond boundlessness. To help the mind find its footing, Bapuji draws a clear boundary. Up to where creation begins and dissolution eventually occurs — across the vast span of roughly one crore generations, encompassing a hundred crore kala — this entire expanse, however unimaginably large it may seem, belongs to the world of had, the limited. The key is simple: wherever something is created and eventually dissolves, wherever there is a beginning and an end, that dimension is bound. It is part of the limited, no matter how vast it appears. But above that boundary begins something of an entirely different nature — the true behad, the genuinely limitless. In these highest dimensions, creation has never once begun and dissolution has never once occurred, not even a single time. They are beyond cycles, beyond time, beyond the very process of creation itself. They are not simply very large or very old. They are, in their very nature, eternal and unbounded.

The behad of behad lies so far beyond ordinary comprehension that even thought itself cannot reach it. It cannot be conceived, imagined, or contained in any mental framework. Bapuji says that each cosmos has its own boundary and its own defined space, just as a solar system has its boundary, a galaxy has its boundary, a universe has its boundary, and a great universe has its boundary — each one vast, yet each one contained within something still greater above it. Above each hundred-crore-kala paramdham there exists a layer, and within that layer the entire cosmos rests, held and surrounded by something higher than itself. And in these highest realms, the very nature of existence is different from anything we know. There are not merely the four directions we are familiar with — north, south, east, and west. There are infinite directions stretching in ways the human mind cannot map. There are infinite kalas — infinite qualities of time and existence. There are infinite powers, and infinite combinations of colour and light, each unique, each beyond description. What exists in these highest dimensions is so far beyond the world we inhabit that no language, no science, and no human concept can do it justice. It can only be pointed toward, never fully spoken.

Bapuji speaks of the bliss of these higher dimensions — the paramanand, the supreme joy that exists in realms beyond our ordinary experience. Even the bliss of our own one-kala paramdham, the highest dimension we are familiar with, is already so vast and so overwhelming that souls can become completely lost in it, absorbed in its beauty and peace. Yet the bliss of the truly highest realms is not just greater — it is countless times greater, beyond any comparison or measure. But here Bapuji offers a gentle and important caution. Some souls, upon reaching a particular higher dimension, become so deeply absorbed in its beauty, its peace, and its bliss that they no longer feel the pull to rise further. They settle there, believing that nothing greater could possibly exist beyond what they are experiencing. And so, without realising it, they stop. They remain caught in that dimension, mistaking a station along the journey for the final destination. The awakened soul, however, does not stop. It recognises that every experience of bliss, however magnificent, is only a step — a glimpse of something still greater above. The true journey is one of continuous rising, drawn ever upward, never settling, never mistaking the beautiful for the ultimate, until the soul reaches its true and original home.

Keeping the Mind Happy — The Vision of the New World

In this sorrowful world, how does one keep the mind happy? Bapuji gives a simple and beautiful answer. The mind needs a toy, and the mind's toy is thought. So give the mind an elevated thought to hold, and it will be happy.

Just as those on the path of devotion keep their minds happy by remembering the pleasures of swarg — and so they perform good deeds and become good souls — the seeker of behad knowledge should think: “I am going to the behad param swarg, the supreme abode of limitless bliss.” There the bliss is supreme beyond all measure. The soul's energy never decreases, not even slightly; the atmosphere itself is of the very highest quality; it is an undying world of light, where the bliss is everlasting — unlike the fleeting pleasure of swarg, from which souls fall back again into human birth. Imagine that supreme, undying bliss, and hold that thought.

When the soul maintains elevated, joyful, and spiritually powerful thoughts even amidst the sorrow and challenges of the world, it attracts immense divine light and spiritual energy into its aura. This inner radiance gradually lifts the soul beyond the influence of disease, sorrow, fear, and negativity, bringing greater peace, strength, and freedom. Such a soul becomes a source of upliftment for others, spreading positive vibrations and helping liberate those trapped in suffering and ignorance. According to Bapuji, this is the sacred work of the Behad children—to become instruments of liberation (Mukti and Jeevan Mukti) for themselves and for others, beginning with the cultivation of pure, elevated, and benevolent thoughts.

The New World to Come

Bapuji teaches that a new and higher world awaits the awakened soul. The Behad souls will ultimately rise beyond this sorrowful and mortal realm, helping transform it through the power of supreme light and spiritual purity. While many souls will attain Mukti and return to their eternal home, others will experience Jeevan Mukti, living in a state of elevated consciousness and inner freedom. The Behad souls, however, are destined for an even higher attainment, becoming masters of the supreme realm of Paramdham. Therefore, Bapuji encourages seekers to focus not on temporary worldly gains, but on the eternal and indestructible spiritual inheritance that awaits them—an attainment that can never be lost and whose glory extends far beyond human imagination.

Bapuji teaches that one of the highest signs of spiritual fortune is to experience the presence of the Supreme Father in physical form (sakari milan) and to be accepted into His divine love and closeness. Such a blessing is considered the mark of exceptionally fortunate souls. However, in the present time, the emphasis is not on seeking a physical meeting but on awakening to one's true soul-consciousness and strengthening the connection with the Supreme through inner experience. The opportunity before every seeker now is to awaken the soul's power, gain mastery over the mind, and move steadily toward spiritual transformation and self-realization.

Of the highest realm of all, Bapuji says something that stops the mind completely — because in that realm, there is no thought at all. Thought itself dissolves. The movement of the mind, the rising and falling of desires, the endless inner conversation — all of it ceases entirely. What remains is something far beyond silence. In that supreme realm, the purush and the prakriti — the soul and its eternal companion — are no longer two. They become one. A single form. The prakriti rests within the very heart of the purush, held there in perfect stillness, in absolute oneness. There is no separation, no distance, no reaching. There is only utter oneness and supreme peace — a peace so complete, so total, that no word in any language can truly hold it. And this — this is the destination. This is where the happy, elevated, and awakened mind is quietly, steadily, and beautifully travelling, step by step, realm by realm, rising through dimension after dimension, shedding every burden along the way, until at last it arrives home — into oneness, into stillness, into that which was always and forever its own true nature.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mann ka khilona soch hai — soch badlo, behad ki soch rakho.”

“The mind’s toy is thought — change the thought, and hold the thought of the limitless.”

Seeing with the Soul's Eye

Bapuji closes this knowledge with the most practical teaching of all: how to live with such a mind, day to day, among others.

True knowledge teaches us to see good in everyone — not by looking at the outer form, but by looking at the soul within. When we judge another as good or bad based on their body, their appearance, or their behaviour, we go wrong at the very root. The teaching is clear: use atmic drishti — the soul's vision, the spiritual eye — and see the soul, not the body. Every being standing before you is a soul, a child of the Supreme, pure at its very core. The body is temporary, the soul is eternal. See the eternal. See the root. See what is real. And let this vision transform not only how we see others, but how we love them. Bapuji teaches that our love, too, must rise from the level of the body to the level of the soul — from deh-love to atma-love. Body-love is conditional, fragile, and bound by what it sees. Soul-love is unconditional, steady, and sees the divine in every being regardless of outer form. Along with this love, hold compassion for every soul and a genuine feeling of welfare for all. And here lies a beautiful truth — when thoughts of compassion and welfare are formed again and again, they do not simply pass through the mind and disappear. They become recorded in the causal body. They take root at the deepest level of our being. And from there, they rise outward, strengthening the vibrations of peace and light we send into the world — quietly, powerfully, and without end.

Yet Bapuji is also deeply realistic. Seeing the soul in everyone does not mean ignoring the reality of what stands before us. If we come to know that a soul is genuinely and deeply negative, should we make it our mission to change it? Bapuji answers with clarity — not always. Some souls are not yet ready to change. They will not shift through words, through love, or through gentle influence. They will change only when they pass through the fire of their own consequences, when life itself brings them to the point of transformation. With such souls, the wise course is not to keep engaging, not to keep looking at their negativity, and not to keep absorbing their energy. Know them quietly, understand what they are, and keep your distance. Bapuji says this with great directness — from heavily negative souls, stay far away. So far away that you do not even take their shadow. This is not harshness. This is wisdom. Because a soul whose aura is thick with darkness cannot even receive the vibrations of Paramshanti — the light simply cannot penetrate what is so densely closed. If the light of supreme peace cannot enter their aura, how then could their mind be reached? To touch the mind of such a soul is not merely difficult — it is, at that point in their journey, a very distant thing indeed. The most powerful thing one can do for them is to hold them in good wishes from afar, and trust that when their time comes, the consequences of their own actions will do what no outer influence could.

So the final practice is balance: see the soul in all, send out the vibrations of peace, and yet protect one's own light by keeping away from what would drain it. In this way the soul keeps its mind clear and strong, and remains a source of peace in the world. This is where the long journey of the mind arrives — at a soul that has won its mind, filled it with Paramshanti, and become, in its own quiet way, an instrument of the world's transformation.

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Deh mat dekho — aatmik drishti se aatma ko dekho. Aatma to ekdam paak hai.”

“Do not look at the body — with the soul's eye, see the soul. The soul is utterly pure.”

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“‘Main atma hoon’ — yahi antarmukhi mann ko khilata hai.”

“‘I am a soul’ — this is what makes the inner mind blossom.”

Chapter Twenty-Two · The Soul as Witness, and Why the Mind Wanders

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mann hi dukh aur sukh ka kaaran hai; ichhaon se hi dukh banta hai.”

“The mind itself is the cause of sorrow and joy; it is from desire that sorrow is born.”

Chapter Twenty-Three · Winning the Mind — Yoga, Connection, and Manmanabhav

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Tu mann mujhe de de — Manmanabhav. Mann tera markat hai, ghode ki tarah daudta rehta hai.”

“Give your mind to Me — this is Manmanabhav. Your mind is a restless monkey; it keeps running like a horse.”

Chapter Twenty-Five · Desire, Vasana, and the Deletion of the Causal Record

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Power seedha karan shareer mein aati hai, aur dheere dheere vikarma vinaash ho jaate hain, mann shaant ho jaata hai.”

“The power goes straight into the causal body, the recorded wrong actions are slowly destroyed, and the mind becomes still.”

Chapter Twenty-Six · The Mind, the Aura, and the Vibrations of Paramshanti

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Paramshanti shabd mein hi param light hoti hai — dono saath mein jude hue hain, alag nahi ho sakte.”

“Within the very word Paramshanti there is supreme light — the two are joined together and cannot be separated.”

Chapter Twenty-Eight · Keeping the Mind Happy — The Vision of the New World

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Mann ka khilona soch hai — soch badlo, behad ki soch rakho.”

“The mind’s toy is thought — change the thought, and hold the thought of the limitless.”

Chapter Twenty-Nine · Seeing with the Soul’s Eye

BAPUJI INSIGHT

“Deh mat dekho — aatmik drishti se aatma ko dekho. Aatma to ekdam paak hai.”

“Do not look at the body — with the soul’s eye, see the soul. The soul is utterly pure.”

★ GLOSSARY

---

A simple guide to the spiritual terms used in this book.

Aadi Shakti — The original, primordial divine feminine power that directs and runs the cosmos.

Aavaran — A covering; the subtle layers of element, record, and karma that form over the soul and hide its original freedom.

Advaitvad — Non-duality; the (incomplete) idea that the soul and the creator are one and the same.

Ahankar — Ego; the false sense of “I am this body, this status.” It belongs to the elemental world, not the pure soul, and blocks supreme knowledge.

Akari — The subtle form of the soul, made of fine elements and not visible to the physical eye.

Amar lok — The immortal world; a realm of supreme element where physical death does not exist.

Atma (Aatma) — The soul; a point of pure conscious light. It is the true self, distinct from the body and the mind.

Atma swaroop — Soul-consciousness; the state of abiding in the soul’s own original nature rather than in the body.

Aura (Ora) — The subtle field of light around a soul. Its brightness reflects the state of the soul and the mind.

- Behad — The limitless; that which is beyond all boundaries. Used for the infinite reaches of creation beyond the limited worlds.
- Bhavatit — Beyond all feeling and modification; a description of the supreme formless state.
- Bhog yoni — A realm of pure enjoyment, where souls experience the fruit of good deeds but are absorbed in pleasure rather than knowledge.
- Brahm — The formless supreme being; the source from which a cosmos is created.
- Brahmapuri — A high subtle realm, the abode associated with Brahma, above the worlds of the sages.
- Buddhi — The intellect; the faculty within the soul that rests upon the sanskars and supports the mind.
- Conscious mind — The mind that is awake and active when a person is fully alert.
- Dvaitvad — Duality; the truth that creator and creation are two distinct realities.
- Gita — The Bhagavad Gita; the scripture from which the teaching “Manmanabhav” — give your mind to Me — is drawn.
- Gunatit — Beyond the three gunas (sato, rajo, tamo); the quality of the highest formless state.
- Had — The limited; the realm in which creation and dissolution take place, as opposed to the limitless behad.
- Janlok — A high subtle world above maholok on the ascending ladder of realms.

Kala — A measure of spiritual power and of the power of a world. Worlds and souls are described as being of so many kala.

Karan shareer — The causal body; the subtle storehouse that holds the complete record of the soul's actions and creates the mind.

Maha brahm — The greater formless being above Brahm, from whom Brahm receives the impulse to create.

Mahakal Pralay — The great dissolution, in which countless cosmoses are withdrawn and held within the supreme being.

Maholok — A high subtle world where the minds of great sages dwell.

Man (Mann) — The mind; the faculty of thought that lives within the soul and moves according to the causal record.

Manmanabhav — The Gita's instruction to give one's mind to the Supreme; the key to stilling the restless mind.

Markat — A monkey; an image used for the restless, ever-jumping nature of the untamed mind.

Mrityu lok — The mortal world; the world of the five elements where death exists.

Multiverse — The vast system of many universes; in this knowledge, a realm described as being of a hundred kala.

Nirakari — The formless state of the soul; the soul's original pure nature, in which the mind was not yet present.

Param agni — Supreme fire; one of the subtle coverings that forms over the soul.

Param akash — Supreme ether; a subtle covering above the soul, finer than ordinary ether.

Param maha brahm — The supreme great formless being, a higher source still in the chain of creation.

Param mahatatva — The supreme great element; the first subtle covering to form over the pure soul.

Param prakash — Supreme light; the divine light, joined with the vibration of Paramshanti, that cleanses the causal body.

Param vayu — Supreme air; one of the subtle coverings that forms over the soul.

Paramanand — Supreme bliss; the immense bliss of the higher realms, far beyond ordinary happiness.

Paramdham — The supreme abode; the highest formless realm, the soul's true home.

Paramshanti — Supreme peace; the highest peace of the soul, and the vibration spread by an awakened soul. (Always written as one word.)

Pralay — Dissolution; the withdrawing of creation. There are partial, ordinary, age-ending, and great dissolutions.

Sakari — The gross form of the soul; the form taken in the mortal world of the five elements.

Sankalp — A thought or subtle resolve; the seed from which creation arises.

Sanskar — The deep impressions and tendencies stored within the soul, upon which the intellect and mind rest.

Sarjan — Creation; the bringing forth of a cosmos through resolve.

Sattvic — Pure and light in quality; used especially of food that supports a peaceful, positive mind.

Shivpuri — A supreme realm of one hundred percent supreme element, where the causal record is fully deleted.

Subconscious mind — The mind that becomes active in the half-awake, half-asleep state.

Sukshma jagat — The subtle world; the realm of subtle bodies and subtle creation, above the gross physical world.

Swarg lok — The heaven world; a realm of enjoyment reached through good deeds, yet a bhog yoni rather than a world of knowledge.

Trigunatit — Beyond the three gunas; the state of a soul that has risen above sato, rajo, and tamo into the paramdham.

Unconscious mind — The mind linked with total unconsciousness and the deepest sleep.

Vasana — Deep-rooted desire or craving, recorded in the causal body, which must be deleted for the mind to become still.

Vikarma — A wrong action whose record binds the soul; vikarmas are destroyed as power cleanses the causal body.

Vishnupuri — A supreme realm in which the supreme element rises to fifty percent, above Brahmapuri.

Viveka — Discernment; the clear, wise judgement with which a seeker chooses thought, word, and deed.

Yog (Yoga) — Connection with the Supreme; the means by which power enters the causal body and the mind is stilled.

PARAMSHANTI: ANTIM PARAM SATYA

A Spiritual Film on Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel
Presented by Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay

Spiritual Movie Arriving in

2026

Soon... THE WORLD WILL KNOW

An upcoming spiritual biographical film based on the divine life, journey, and realisation of the ultimate truth by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel. The film traces Bapuji's extraordinary path — from a young soul who questioned God about the suffering of humanity, to the supreme spiritual realisation of Paramshanti — the Antim Param Satya: the final, supreme truth.
