About Bapuji

Bapuji (full name: Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly called “Dadaji” by the younger generation) was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. However, he spent his childhood in another village named Ambasan, also located in the Mehsana district.

In the early part of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realizing the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers to realize their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times, he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy (CA), he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law (LLB) degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, he established a spiritual institution called “Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay” in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world, filled with suffering and disorder, into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt. Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as “Maa,” worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to 18 hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realized through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of superconsciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji’s teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the types of celestial creators across different dimensions, the creation of our solar system, galaxy, and universe, and most importantly, the transcendental knowledge of the multiverse and realities beyond it. His knowledge is supremely profound and is intended for highly evolved seekers, referred to as “behad souls.” According to Bapuji, these “behad souls” will play a key role in transforming this mortal world into an eternal divine realm.

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

About Sakshi Patel

Smt. Sakshi Patel is a spiritual guide, meditation teacher, and a dedicated contributor to the global mission of spreading divine knowledge as taught by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel. Along with Shri. Anant Patel, she has played a key role in expanding these teachings to a global audience, helping grow the YouTube channel Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel to over 16 million subscribers, making it one of the most widely followed spiritual platforms.

Through her calm presence and clear expression, she has become a guiding force for seekers who wish to understand and experience inner transformation.

She is widely known for her work on the YouTube channel “Paramshanti Motivation & Meditation”, which has over 6 lakh+ subscribers, where she conducts daily guided meditation sessions in the morning and shares deep spiritual insights in a simple, practical, and experienceable manner, bridging profound spiritual wisdom with modern life.

With over 1000+ live meditation sessions completed, she has consistently guided thousands of seekers toward inner awareness and stability. With a background in MBA (Finance), Smt. Sakshi Patel chose to dedicate herself fully to the path of spiritual service. Her journey reflects a shift from external success to inner realization, aligning completely with the teachings of self-awareness, consciousness, and Paramshanti.

Her words are not merely motivational — they are rooted in direct understanding and are designed to awaken deeper awareness within the reader. The Bhagavad Gita discourses gathered in this book grew out of her daily morning sessions, in which the Gita was read verse by verse and then experienced in meditation.

This book grows out of a daily morning gathering. Each day, before the sun had fully risen, seekers from around the world came together to sit in silence and to listen. What they listened to was the Bhagavad Gita — not as a distant scripture, but as a living guide read slowly, verse by verse, and then experienced in deep meditation.

The Gita is said to be the essence of all scriptures. It is taught that if a person studies it well, reflecting upon it and living by it, then the seeker need not gather other scriptures, for everything is held within these eighteen chapters. This is why the Gita was chosen as the path for these sessions.

Yet these pages carry something more. They read the Gita in the light of the Behad Gyan revealed by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel — the supreme knowledge of the soul, of the Supreme Father, and of the boundless creation. Where the Gita speaks of the soul that is never born and never dies, this knowledge shows the soul as a point of pure white light. Where the Gita speaks of returning to the supreme abode, this knowledge shows the path of the seeker home.

The teaching here is simple by design. It is written for the newcomer who has never heard these words before, as well as for the one who has walked this path for years. Nothing has been added that was not spoken. The aim is only to refine the presentation, never to change the knowledge.

May these pages help you to know yourself as the soul, to rise above the fear of death, and to walk steadily toward that supreme peace which is your own true nature.

INTRODUCTION

Why We Study the Gita

We begin with a question that every seeker should ask: why are we studying Bhagavad Gita at all? Many of us have already received a vast and boundless knowledge — Behad Gyan given by Bapuji. We have been shown not the creation of one Brahmand alone, but of countless solar systems, galaxies and universes. We have been shown how they are created, how their time is completed, and how they are created again. With such a treasure already in our hands, why turn to the Gita?

The answer is that knowing is different from living. We already know that we are the soul and not the body. Almost everyone knows this. But to actually walk upon that knowledge, to remain established in it through every situation of the day — that is what we find so difficult. Bhagavad Gita gives us the means. It gives our intellect the reasoning, the conviction and the steadiness by which we can return again and again, to the awareness of the self.

Knowledge alone does not stay. For knowledge to remain within us, a vessel is needed — and that vessel is right conduct, the living of correct principles. This is what we call dharma: the practice of the principles we have understood. We hear, we reflect, and slowly we begin to imbibe. The scriptures, the Vedas and the Upanishads each offer their illustrations and explanations, and each one teaches us something. As we begin to take these in, our life becomes finer and more beautiful.

The Gita is also deeply relevant to who we are. We are called to be founder souls — seed souls of a new world. And the work of a seed is everything, for the tree takes after the seed. If the seed is unsound, the whole tree, every branch, leaf and fruit, will be unsound as well. So if we ourselves are restless and unsteady, what can we offer to the branches, the leaves, the whole world that depends upon us? It is for this reason that we must remain in supreme peace, established in a stable state.

There is one more truth that makes this study urgent. If even a great soul like Arjuna — a hero among heroes — could be drawn into such confusion, gripped by attachment until he forgot his own dharma, then what are we? In an age of great outward progress, the intellect is being pulled in directions that erode discernment. The study of the Gita is the medicine. By it we, like Arjuna, may step out of the confusions, doubts and attachments in which we are caught.

Then who is Krishna, the divine speaker of the Gita? According to these teachings, Arjuna represents the sincere seeker who is prepared to listen, while Krishna is the enlightened guide who imparts the wisdom of the Gita. Krishna is revered as Yogeshwar—the Lord of Yog. Bapuji reveals a profound and rarely discussed spiritual secret: Krishna is not merely a great saint, king, or divine incarnation, but the Aakaari manifestation of the Supreme Almighty Authority itself. This Supreme Reality is described as being beyond the Brahma, Vishnu, and Shankar who govern this Brahmand; beyond Shiv, Mahashiv, and Param Mahashiv, who preside over the multiverse; beyond even the sovereign of countless Brahmands. In this understanding, Krishna is the descended form of that Supreme Almighty Authority. Therefore, the one who delivers the Bhagavad Gita is not an ordinary being, but the direct manifestation of the highest divine power, imparting eternal wisdom for the upliftment of all souls.

CHAPTER 1

The Despair of Arjuna — The Inner Battlefield

The first chapter of the Gita is called the Yog of Arjuna's Despair. In it, Krishna gives no teaching at all. Instead, the whole scene is set before us. The armies of the Kauravas and the Pandavas stand face to face, ready for war. Krishna takes Arjuna's chariot into the very middle of the field of Kurukshetra.

There, looking around, Arjuna sees his own kinsmen, his close relations, his teachers — Kripacharya, Dronacharya, the grandsire Bhishma who is like a father to him. His heart sinks. His eyes fill with tears until even his sight is blurred. He is asked to raise the cry of battle against his own family, and he cannot bear it.

This despair is where the knowledge of dharmā and adharma begins. For the battlefield of the Gita is not only an outer field. It is the field within us. The struggle between dharmā and adharma is happening inside each one of us, every day. The divine and the demonic, the godly tendency and the corrupted tendency, are both powerful within us. When a situation arises, we do not know which of the two will come forward.

So when we read of Arjuna, we are reading about ourselves. We too find ourselves surrounded, sunk in sorrow, caught in attachment, having forgotten our true dharma. It is in exactly such a moment that the voice of Yogeshwar Krishna alone can draw us out. This is a battle of you versus you. And it is for this inner war that the whole teaching of the Gita is given.

“This battle is the battle within — it is you versus you.”

CHAPTER 2

The Body and the Embodied — The Imperishable Soul

The second chapter, the Yog of Knowledge, is the largest and one of the most important. Here Krishna begins his teaching, and the whole chapter turns upon a single distinction — the difference between the body and the embodied. Again and again Krishna shows Arjuna this difference: the body, and the one who dwells within the body.

Arjuna's fear is that he is about to commit a great sin by killing his own people and teachers. But Krishna tells him not to look at the body. The body, he says, is like a garment. Just as we change our clothes, so the embodied changes bodies. This outer cloak is changed again and again. And the one who wears it — the embodied, the soul, the seer — never dies. Fire cannot burn it. Water and air cannot dry it. It is the witness; it is the soul.

Through the whole Gita, this is the knowledge being given: the knowledge of the self. We are asked to rise above the feeling of being the body, to free ourselves from the needs, cravings and desires of the body — from the buried tendencies that lead us into sin — and to come to know the soul. The more we know ourselves as the embodied, the seer, the soul that never dies, the more the bondage of the body loosens.

Krishna then unfolds the mystery of birth and death. Whoever has been born, their death is certain; it will surely come. But what is birth? Birth here means the act of the supreme judge. Under the system of justice of the Supreme Father, in keeping with the fruits of a soul's past actions, the human body is granted to the soul as an instrument for its use. That granting of a human body, as a means, is what we call birth. The Supreme Father does no injustice to anyone; everything is left to one's own actions.

And what is death? When the lifespan is complete, the soul's letting go of this perishable body is what we call death. The five elements — fire, water, air, ether and earth — joined together form this human body, and this body is subject to death. But the soul Krishna declares to be unborn, deathless, eternal and imperishable. The soul is beyond death; only this human instrument, given by the Supreme, is subject to dying.

From this comes a teaching about victory over death. Victory over death is, in truth, victory over the fear of death. A frightened, cowardly person dies hundreds of times in life; but the fearless one, who has come to know the secret of death, embraces death only once. Krishna calls death a mere change of garments. Just as we bathe and put on fresh clothes and are glad, so for the soul there comes, according to its past actions, a new body and a new instrument. We should not grieve over this; rather, we may be at peace.

How, then, does a person win victory over the fear of death? The answer is to become deathless within life itself. The one who, while living, comes to know that imperishable essence — who knows the self, who knows the Supreme Father dwelling within as the indwelling Lord, who knows that nature of truth, consciousness and bliss — that one becomes free of the fear of death. Such a person, fulfilling the purpose of human life and reaching the supreme goal, conquers death.

There is a teaching here too about who we are. Every human being is, in truth, a seeker. Wandering through eighty-four lakh forms of life, the soul is at last given this human body for one purpose only — its own welfare. It is not given for eating, drinking and indulgence. Because we are seekers, no one should ever despair of their own upliftment. The attainment of the Supreme is the birthright of every human being, and as a seeker each one is free, capable and worthy to attain it.

But first we must recognise our purpose and firmly accept: I am not a worldly being; I am a seeker. To say I am a man, I am a woman, I belong to this class or that, I am a householder or a renunciate — all such labels belong only to worldly dealings. They have their place as boundaries within society. But on the path to the Supreme they become an obstacle, because the attainment of the Supreme does not come to the body. It comes to the seeker; and the seeker, in essence, is bodiless.

As the teaching deepens, Krishna says that the wise do not grieve for the living or for the dead. He shows that the soul itself ever abides in deathlessness, while the body is ceaselessly moving toward death. From the womb to childhood, from childhood to youth, from youth to old age, and then to another body — the states of the body keep changing, yet the embodied within remains exactly as it is.

And the most important teaching of all is this: bondage and liberation belong to soul, not to the body. The body's bondage will fall away of itself one day; for that, no special effort is needed. What binds us is the mind. We have bound ourselves, in our own minds, to every person and everything. So the work is to let go in the mind. The mind alone is the cause of bondage, and the mind alone is the cause of liberation. Even after death, a soul still attached in the mind to this world remains tied to it; but the soul that is free of such desire is free indeed.

Krishna teaches Arjuna that experiences such as heat and cold, happiness and sorrow, come through the senses and are only temporary. They arise for a short time and then pass away. Therefore, we should learn to tolerate them without becoming disturbed. A person who remains calm and steady in both pleasure and pain, and who is not shaken by the attractions and discomforts of the senses, becomes worthy of liberation. In other words, if we seek liberation, we must not allow sensory experiences and worldly situations to create restlessness within us.

“You are not the body; you are the embodied — the soul that never dies.”

CHAPTER 3

The Path of Action — Karma Yog

The third chapter brings us to Karma Yog, the path of action — a subject with which everyone is familiar. Here Shri Krishna confirms that action cannot simply be abandoned. As he had already urged in the second chapter, so he urges again: act, do your duty.

When the Mahabharata war was about to begin, Krishna taught Arjuna about Karma Yog—the path of right action. But Arjuna found this difficult because he was deeply attached to his family and loved ones. Since Krishna had often praised knowledge, Arjuna began to think that the path of knowledge might be easier. He felt that if he could avoid action and responsibility, he would find peace. Krishna corrected this misunderstanding. He explained that whether a person follows the path of knowledge or the path of action, action cannot be completely avoided. Even those who follow the path of knowledge must still perform actions in one form or another.

What is the difference? In Karma Yog one acts while surrendering everything to the Supreme, acting in a spirit of desireless action. The result is left to the Supreme. The way to be released from the binding of action is also given here: when we attain realisation of the Supreme, when established in our own conscious nature we attain that supreme essence and have his divine vision, then we are freed from actions.

Why does action bind at all? Because every action leaves an impression, and these impressions form our samskaras. Our samskaras are the root cause of the cycle of birth and death. The tendencies lodged within our causal body, the impressions stored there, become the very cause of our next birth. This is the reason our action matters completely.

In practice, when seeker performs all actions, something beautiful unfolds. With steady practice, the seeker gradually begins to offer every action to the Supreme, and a spirit of devotion arises within. Now whatever the seeker does is done as an offering. The seeker keeps faith in the Supreme and acts with enthusiasm.

◆ Sakshi Insight: “Karm to karne hi padenge — par har karm Parmatma ko arpan karte hue, nishkaam bhaav se.”

“Action must indeed be done — but let every action be offered to the Supreme, performed in the spirit of desirelessness.”

CHAPTER 4

Action as Sacrifice — Knowledge, Action and Renunciation

The fourth chapter carries the path of action forward and teaches that our actions should be like a sacrifice — a yagna. It is helpful to recall a simple illustration that was shared: a householder once welcomed a guest into his home and, seeing the presence of the Lord amongst guest, offered his own portion of food to the visitor. He willingly gave up his own comfort out of selflessness and devotion. Because his heart was filled with surrender and generosity, the entire place became sanctified. This example demonstrates the spirit in which actions should be performed. True action is not driven by selfish desire but by devotion, service, and surrender. Some seekers go even further, making the soul's effort to attain the Supreme their very sacrifice. For them, that sincere spiritual striving itself becomes their yagna.

Krishna places great emphasis throughout the Gita on desireless action — action done without selfish motive, and on the state of nishkarm (non-action) within action. If we truly reflect upon, recite and study this teaching with a selfless heart, it is said that we do not require any other scripture, for the Gita holds it all.

It is in this setting that we should hold the question of who Krishna truly is. He is the Aakaari descent of that supreme power who stands above the owners of multiverses, of countless Brahmands - one called the Supreme, the Almighty. Shri Krishna who gives this knowledge is therefore not ordinary; he is showing soul the way to reach ultimate, Supreme Father.

Here too we are reminded what devotion truly means. To recite a story or perform a few minutes of ritual worship is not devotion. Bapuji has said that if your devotion is supreme — a complete surrender like that of Meera — then knowledge will surely come to you; but if your devotion is incomplete, knowledge will not come, for the end-product of knowledge is the Supreme himself. Thus devotion and knowledge are joined: through complete devotion the seeker is made ready, and through knowledge the seeker is fulfilled.

And we are asked to look honestly at ourselves. After all these chapters, where have we reached? How many principles have we taken up? How far are we living our dharma? For dharma and adharma are both unfolding within us. This is the battle. Whichever we attend to, that grows. Gita is here so that, in the age of Kalki, we may hear this voice and learn to strengthen the dharma within and to destroy the adharma that lives within us.

♦ Sakshi Insight: “Yadi aapki bhakti Meera ke samaan sampoorna samarpan ki ho, to gyan avashya milega.”

“If your devotion is a complete surrender, like that of Meera, then knowledge will surely come to you.”

CHAPTER 5

The Renunciation of Action — Karma Sanyas

By the fifth chapter, the teaching is being widened. We have come from Yog of Knowledge in the second chapter, into Karma Yog in the third, into the Yog of Knowledge, Action and Renunciation in the fourth, and now into the Renunciation of Action. The same truths are being explained in different ways, again and again, because even after so much explanation Arjuna remains in doubt.

When Arjuna hears that knowledge is higher than action, he becomes confused and asks Krishna, “If knowledge is superior, why are you urging me to engage in this difficult and bloody battle?” Arjuna assumes that the path of knowledge requires a person to withdraw from action altogether. Krishna then corrects this misunderstanding. He explains that the highest realization on the path of knowledge is inseparable from the “Yog of Knowledge, Action, and Renunciation”. True wisdom does not mean abandoning action; rather, it means acting with understanding and detachment. Even a person established in knowledge continues to perform actions.

Krishna makes it clear that action done through the path of renunciation, or through knowledge, and action done through Karma Yog — that is, desireless action(nishkarm) — both lead to the supreme good. Yet of these two, the desireless Karma Yogi is regarded as superior to the one who acts merely from the standpoint of knowledge or renunciation. When both arrive at the same destination, desireless action is held to be the higher way.

A true renunciate is one who neither harbors hatred toward anyone nor desires anything for himself. Such a person remains established in renunciation, whether following the path of knowledge or the path of selfless action. Those with limited understanding often regard the path of knowledge and the path of desireless action as separate and distinct. However, those who perceive the truth recognize that both paths lead to the same ultimate goal. They also understand that desireless Karma Yog—the path of selfless action—is often the simpler and more accessible way to attain it.

◆ Sakshi Insight: “Jo na kisi se dvesh karta hai, na kisi ki aakanksha — vahi sachcha sanyasi hai.”

“The one who neither hates anyone nor longs for anything — that one is the true renunciate.”

CHAPTER 6

The Path of Meditation — Self-Mastery

The sixth chapter is the Yog of Meditation, the Yog of self-restraint. It makes meditation clear as the final doorway to self-realisation. Meditation, in its essence, is the practice of concentrating the mind on one's own soul and, through that inner focus, establishing a connection with the Supreme. Krishna begins by defining the qualities of a true renunciate and explaining the nature of genuine renunciation. He then provides practical guidance for the seeker, describing how to sit for spiritual practice, how to maintain proper posture, and even what kind of food to eat and in what quantity.

At the heart of this chapter is a single, searching truth. If a person, together with the mind and the senses, gains victory over the body, then in that very moment the soul becomes a friend to that person. But when a person cannot conquer body, mind and senses, then the soul itself becomes an enemy. The whole question, then, is mastery of the self.

How is such mastery attained? It is achieved through detachment and consistent practice. By following spiritual disciplines, ethical restraints, and proper observances, we gradually remove the lust, anger, greed, attachment, and desires that cloud the mind, as well as the deep impressions embedded within our nature. As these tendencies become calm and purified, we gain control over ourselves and develop inner discipline. When the mind is fully governed and the restless tendencies have subsided, we become capable of resting in the Supreme. This state of inner mastery and union with the Supreme is the true meaning of self-restraint.

Here a subtle teaching is given about the breath and its connection to the air element. Every time we breathe, it is the air element that is in motion. According to these teachings, sankalp (intention or resolve) is also closely related to the nature of the air element. Through proper spiritual practice, when the breath is brought into a steady and balanced rhythm, the life-force (prana) within us begins to flow in a regulated and harmonious manner. As the air element becomes balanced and directed correctly, the mind and body gradually become calmer. In this way, controlled breathing helps quiet the body's restless energies, bringing greater inner stability, mental peace, and self-mastery.

Self-restraint, however, is never restraint alone. It is paired always with the awakening of the soul. We are encouraged to remain constantly guided by discernment (viveka), stay calm in the face of desires and cravings, and remain vigilant against the pull of temptation and attachment. At the same time, we should continue our spiritual journey with steady dedication and unwavering effort. When self-restraint is combined with self-awareness, life becomes filled with auspiciousness, divine qualities, and a remarkable awakening of inner power. The teachings explain that desires for sense objects often persist across many lifetimes. These tendencies accompany the soul from birth to birth until they are finally purified and dissolved.

It is also taught that householder life is one of the highest fields for spiritual growth. A person need not abandon family or worldly responsibilities to progress spiritually. By living as a householder while cultivating the spirit of inner renunciation, one can attain union with the Supreme.

The real goal is to discover the kind of reflection, contemplation, and spiritual awareness that leads to the Supreme, and then to remain established in that awareness while carrying out the duties and responsibilities of everyday life.

♦ Sakshi Insight: “Jo apne mann aur indriyon sahit shareer ko jeet leta hai, uski atma uski mitra ban jaati hai.”

“For the one who conquers the body together with the mind and the senses, the soul itself becomes a friend.”

CHAPTER 7

Knowledge and Realisation

The seventh chapter is the Yog of Knowledge and Realisation. Here Krishna repeats, that one who immerses in him attains him: the one who becomes absorbed in him, who becomes one with him, reaches him. To attain him, therefore, we must lose ourselves in him.

In this chapter, two natures are distinguished. There is the higher nature, para-shakti, which is conscious — the living, conscious power. And there is the lower nature, the apara-shakti — the material power, made of the five senses together with mind, intellect and ego. Mind and intellect belong to this lower nature of the Supreme. Though it is his own power, this lower nature is of a different character from him.

This distinction matters for our practice. When we say, surrender the mind and intellect to the Supreme, we are pointing to this. The conscious soul is to be turned toward the conscious Supreme, while the instruments of the lower nature are quieted and offered up. The whole movement of this chapter is toward that absorption in which the seeker, leaving behind the lower nature, rests wholly in the Supreme and so attains him.

“The one who becomes absorbed in Me — that one attains Me.”

CHAPTER 8

The Imperishable and the Final Moment

In the eighth chapter, Arjuna brings six questions to Krishna — beginning with the question, what is Brahm? Through these questions the teaching turns toward the imperishable and toward the final moment of life.

A truth that returns through many chapters is gathered here: that if the Supreme is to be remembered at the very last moment, then the remembrance must be practised now. We cannot summon at the end what we have not practised while living. So the teaching given is the remembrance of the Supreme with every breath — to make of each breath a remembrance, a simran of the Supreme.

For we do not know which breath shall be the last. The one who has filled life with the remembrance of the Supreme carries that remembrance into the final moment, and so passes beyond. This is why the seeker is asked, not to wait for some far-off hour, but to remember the Supreme breath by breath, today and every day.

“Let your every breath be a remembrance of the Supreme — for we do not know which breath shall be the last.”

CHAPTER 9

The Royal Secret — The Supreme Worship

The ninth chapter holds a royal secret. Here, the Supreme reveals His own glory and true nature, declaring, “I am the sacrifice (yagna), and I am the Lord and Master of all sacrifices.” He then imparts a profound teaching that deserves careful reflection. Those who engage in worship, prayer, equanimity, and sacrifice while still holding onto worldly desires may attain the heavenly realms as a result of their spiritual merits. However, after enjoying the pleasures of heaven, when the accumulated merit is exhausted, they must return once again to the cycle of birth and death.

In this way, a person whose devotion remains tied to desires and attachments continues to move through the cycle of rebirth. Such a seeker may gain temporary heavenly rewards, but does not attain permanent liberation. The desire-bound worshipper repeatedly comes and goes, taking birth again and again until all cravings are transcended.

This is a turning point. Worship that still clings to its own wants cannot give the final freedom. The Supreme says that those who take refuge in him with desire still return, while those who turn to him without other longing are carried beyond. So the chapter draws us toward a worship that asks for nothing but him.

In the light of the Behad Gyan, this chapter opens onto the very process of creation. There was a desire in Nirakari — may I become many from one — and so the creation was brought forth. Bapuji has shown how this unfolds in truth: how, from the formless, the subtle Aakaari form arose; how the Aakaari Adi Shiv and Adi Shakti, dwelling in Shivpuri, were brought into being; how the three — Brahma, Vishnu and Shankar — were formed; how the seven lokas were established where the subtle worlds move, and the world of mortals where human beings dwell, and below them the lower worlds. It is a great secret: how, as intentions descended and power was lost, the journey went from light into the supreme elements and into the elements, from the formless to the form-bearing to the embodied.

The key message of this chapter is both a warning and an inspiration. The warning is that worship performed with selfish desires keeps a person bound to the cycle of birth and death. Such worship may bring temporary rewards, but it does not lead to lasting liberation. The inspiration is the vision of the vast, beautiful, and perfectly ordered creation that has emerged from the Supreme. By understanding both of these truths, a seeker is encouraged to practice selfless devotion and to pursue true knowledge that leads back to the Supreme Source of all existence.

“Those who worship while still bound by desire come and go again and again — they meet rebirth.”

CHAPTER 10

The Divine Glories — Conquering Maya

The tenth chapter is the Yog of Divine Glories. Explaining all his manifestations, Krishna says at the end that among the best of beings he himself is Krishna. This is the chapter in which the Supreme reveals his splendour, so that the seeker's faith and steadiness may grow.

From this arises a desire that many seekers share: the desire to overcome Maya, the illusion that binds us to the material world. But how can we know whether we are making progress on this path or have truly gained victory over it? The teachings answer this question by describing the signs and qualities of a person who is gradually gaining mastery over Maya. These marks help a seeker recognize spiritual growth and understand how far they have progressed on the journey toward liberation.

Here too a great mystery of the soul is touched. We say easily that the soul is unborn, deathless and imperishable. Yet there is a deeper truth. Not every soul is eternal in the same way. When the hundred years of Brahma are complete, when the lifespan of this Brahmand is finished, even the higher lokas come to an end; and the souls of the lower order that were created within this Brahmand are dissolved — their existence ceases. The souls that endure beyond this are the Behad souls, made of supreme light and supreme great elements, who rise above this Brahmand.

“We are to become conquerors of this world of illusion — to become victors over Maya.”

CHAPTER 11

The Vision of the Cosmic Form

In the eleventh chapter, the Yog of the Vision of the Cosmic Form, Arjuna says to Krishna: I have heard what you have told me, and I have understood — but now I wish to see. In the opening verses the Supreme again describes a form of himself, and even shows it; yet Arjuna cannot see it. Then Krishna tells him plainly: you cannot see me with these physical eyes, with this materialistic intellect.

And so a divine eye is granted by Krishna. Only when the ordinary sight is set aside can the cosmic form be beheld. This is a teaching for every seeker: that the Supreme is not to be grasped by the physical eye or the worldly intellect, but by a vision that the Supreme himself bestows. Even the greatest sage or teacher cannot, by his own power alone, grant such a vision; it is the Lord of Yog who gives the capacity for Yog.

There is a question worth holding from this chapter. When the cosmic form had been revealed and Arjuna had seen, did the war then stop? It did not. The vision did not end the battle, because the battle of dharma and adharma still had to be fought. The seeing does not excuse us from the doing. Having glimpsed the truth, Arjuna still had to rise and act — and so do we.

“You cannot see Me with these eyes — you cannot see Me with the material intellect.”

CHAPTER 12

The Path of Devotion — Bhakti Yog

The twelfth chapter is Bhakti Yog, the path of devotion. However exalted a soul may be, we are still devotees of that Supreme. Call it the relationship of soul and Supreme, or the relationship of devotee and Lord — the name matters less than the feeling, bhaav, behind it. Whatever path we take — knowledge, action, devotion, meditation — the inner feeling for the Supreme is indispensable.

For the connection of soul with Supreme, a balance is needed. Some hold in their hearts the formless, attribute-less, while regarding his form-bearing, human aspect as merely ordinary. But whether by the path of knowledge or the path of devotion, what matters is the link of the soul with the Supreme — the very link that the Gopis had, that Radha had. Devotion and knowledge are joined, for whenever we meditate, a current of devotion is also present within us, since there is complete surrender to the Supreme.

When we are told to surrender the mind and intellect to the Supreme, we should understand the feeling in which it is meant, and not raise dry argument against it. Placed within the setting of devotion, the same instruction takes on a fuller meaning. The aim is that, along with the realisation of one's own nature as the soul, the state of absorption in Brahm should be attained — that one should dissolve into Brahm, into the Supreme Father. It is taught that the path of devotion leads to liberation, and that complete, surrendered devotion makes the soul ready to receive knowledge and to merge in the Supreme.

“Take up whichever path you will — within it, the feeling for the Supreme is indispensable.”

The Field and the Knower of the Field

The thirteenth chapter is the Yog of the Field(Kshetra) and the Knower of the Field. Arjuna asks Krishna to teach him about nature and the spirit, about the field and the knower of the field, and about knowledge and ignorance. The teaching unfolds the difference between the two — between the field and the knower of the field. Krishna begins by explaining that the field (Kshetra) is everything that can be observed and experienced. It includes the physical body, the mind, the senses, emotions, thoughts, and the ever-changing material world. The knower of the field (Kshetrajna) is the conscious soul that experiences and observes all these things. The body changes, thoughts change, emotions change, and circumstances change, but the soul remains the witness that is aware of these changes.

Within this is a striking interpretation. In the heart of a human being there are two tendencies — the divine and the demonic. The divine tendency is that which leads the soul into the supreme dharma, into the Supreme Brahman. When the wealth of this divine tendency becomes abundant, when it grows strong within us, then this very body becomes a field of dharma — a Dharmakshetra.

The other tendency is the demonic, the corrupted, which takes this perishable world to be everything and which makes us place our faith in the world. When this demonic tendency, this demonic wealth, grows abundant within us, then this very body becomes a Kurukshetra. So the field of dharma and the field of battle are both within. Krishna asks Arjuna, again and again, to learn to tell the two apart — to discern, within himself, the divine from the demonic.

When we first see this clearly — when a clear picture forms of what is being spoken of — then the verses themselves become simple, and we can read them swiftly and grasp their full meaning. The whole purpose is discernment: to know the field from the knower of the field, and the divine tendency from the demonic, within our own being.

“When the divine tendency grows strong, this very body becomes a field of dharma; when the demonic tendency grows strong, this very body becomes the field of battle.”

CHAPTER 14

The Three Qualities of Nature

The fourteenth chapter is the Yog of the Division of the Three Qualities. Having explained so much, Krishna says to Arjuna: among all knowledge, I will tell you once more the highest. And he speaks of the three qualities of nature — sattva, rajas and tamas.

What is the use of knowing these qualities? If we can recognise which is the quality of purity, which the quality of passion and which the quality of inertia, then we can understand how a life lived chiefly in one or another of them fares, and where it leads. The chapter shows the destiny of those who live in each.

It is taught that these three qualities, born of nature, bind the imperishable soul to the body. The pure soul, in its true nature, is never bound by the qualities at all; but when it takes the perishable body to be itself, when it says of the body 'I' and 'mine', then it is bound. To know the self, to abide in the self, is to remain unbound. So long as a being is filled with these three qualities of nature, that being remains embodied.

Beyond the three lies a further state — the state of one who has gone past the qualities, the trigunatit. This is the condition above sattva, rajas and tamas alike. When the remembrance of the self-awakens, we rise above all three; and in that rising, the state of liberation-in-life begins to dawn. The whole chapter points toward this: to know the qualities, to live increasingly in purity, and at last to pass beyond all qualities into the self.

“So long as we are filled with the three qualities of nature, so long we remain bound to the body.”

CHAPTER 15

The Supreme Person

The fifteenth chapter is Purushottam Yog, the Yog of the Supreme Person. It carries forward the teaching of the qualities and turns the seeker's gaze toward that which is highest — the Supreme Person, beyond the perishable and beyond even the imperishable as ordinarily conceived.

When the wise one looks within, into the depths of the inner being, and dissolves the mind into the feeling of 'I am That' — into the awareness of soham — the seeker is drawn toward this supreme reality. The verses here are read together with those that come before and after, for the teaching of the gunas, of the supreme person, and of the divine and demonic natures form one continuous movement.

The thread that runs through this chapter is the same that runs through the whole Gita: to know oneself as the soul, to rise above the binding qualities of nature, and to fix the awareness upon the Supreme Person who is the source and goal of all. In knowing him, the seeker finds the ground of liberation.

“The wise one looks within and dissolves the mind into the awareness of 'I am That'.”

CHAPTER 16

The Divine and the Demonic Within

The sixteenth chapter is the Yog of the Division of the Divine and Demonic Wealth. This chapter concerns the divine and demonic tendencies that live in every one of us. Krishna shines a light upon our demonic impressions — for those whose samskaras are demonic can never attain him — and so calls us to recognise and to change them.

A simple law governs this inner life: whatever we give our attention to grows firm. Whichever sanskaar we feed becomes strong, whether it is a demonic impression or a good one. So between our two kinds of impressions, we must be ceaseless in deciding which is to be our ruling impression. As we learned in the chapter on the qualities, sattva, rajas and tamas are all present within us; at times the pure is suppressed and the inert becomes dominant, and at times, by our effort, the lower is suppressed and the pure becomes dominant. The negative, demonic impressions become firmly fixed easily; therefore we must consciously make our divine impressions strong.

Krishna sets out the marks of the divine wealth, and we are told to write them down and to bring them into ourselves. They are: the complete absence of fear; purity of the inner being; firm steadiness in meditation upon the knowledge of truth, with unbroken devotion; the surrender of all that one has; and the thorough control of the senses, together with the performance of sacrifice. These are the qualities that should live within us — fearlessness, an inner being made pure, a mind held steady in meditation for the knowledge of truth, total surrender, mastery of the senses, and a life lived as sacrifice.

At the close of this chapter, the Lord of Yog makes a clear statement: only when lust, anger and greed are given up does true action truly begin. This is a battle of you versus you. Within yourself lies your positive side, your divine tendency; make it powerful, make it strong. For it is by feeding the divine within, and starving the demonic within, that the seeker is set free.

CHAPTER 17

The Threefold Faith

The seventeenth chapter is the Yog of the Division of the Threefold Faith. It carries forward the teaching of the qualities. Just as we learned which knowledge is of the nature of purity, which of passion, and which of inertia, so here Krishna shows that faith itself, and sacrifice, austerity and charity as well, may each be of the nature of sattva, rajas or tamas. Whatever sacrifice, austerity or gift is offered can be divided into these three.

This continues the teaching, given earlier, that our very actions should be like a sacrifice. Take any tendency, take any impression — all of them contain the three qualities. So faith, worship and giving are not one single thing; their worth depends upon the quality in which they are done.

There is a sobering observation here about the age in which we live. The very food, water and air of our time have, by the prevailing condition of the world, naturally become tamas-dominated. What once held purity now holds little. This is why the inner work of cultivating purity is so important, for the outer atmosphere itself offers us less of it.

And once again, the chapter joins to what came before. At the end of the sixteenth chapter, the Lord of Yog had declared that only with the giving up of lust, anger and greed does action truly begin. Here Krishna upholds the Gita itself as the highest, saying: depend upon this scripture of the Gita. In a most ordered way, step by step, he has led the seeker from renunciation and the renunciation of action, gradually higher, until we are brought to this point.

“Whatever sacrifice, austerity or charity is performed — it too carries the qualities of purity, passion and inertia.”

CHAPTER 18

Liberation Through Renunciation

The eighteenth and final chapter is the Yog of Liberation through Renunciation. It gathers the whole Gita together. We are reminded that even knowledge has its three qualities — sattva, rajas and tamas — just as sacrifice, austerity and charity do. And the question is asked: who is the one bound to the body? The one bound is the one who is filled with the qualities of purity, passion and inertia. But beyond all qualities there is no quality at all.

Here the teaching of the liberated-in-life is given. The verses speak of the wise one who looks into the depths of the inner being and dissolves the mind in the feeling of 'I am That'. Again and again Krishna asks us to renounce the fruit of action, because so long as we are full of these three qualities of nature we remain embodied. When we rise above sattva, rajas and tamas alike — when we experience the state beyond the three qualities — then the state of liberation-in-life is ours.

We cannot complete eighteen chapters in eighteen days, nor exhaust their depth in any short time; if we were to enter even a few verses of a single chapter through the Behad Gyan, each would ask much of us. But the aim has been to touch the most important matters, so that those who have never opened the Gita might begin to study it, and those who know it might bring its learnings, daily, into life.

At the last, Krishna upholds the Gita as supreme and tells the seeker to take refuge in it. The journey he has led — from the despair of the first chapter, through action and knowledge and renunciation, through meditation and devotion, through the qualities of nature and the divine and demonic within — arrives here, at liberation through the renunciation of the fruit of action, established in the self.

“When we rise above all three qualities and experience the state beyond them, the state of liberation-in-life is attained.”

BEYOND THE EIGHTEEN

The Truth of Moksha and Jeevan-Mukti

Running beneath the whole of this study is the great question of liberation — of moksha, of mukti, of jeevan-mukti. Bapuji has explained the real meaning of these, and it is far higher and more exact than we often suppose.

Liberation-in-life is a very high state, and it is the high-quality souls who reach it. It is not won by a single resolve made in a single life. The resolve for liberation — the sankalp of moksha — must be carried across many ages, many lifetimes. A soul lives with that resolve through many cycles of time, and then, in some one cycle, the fruit of that long resolve at last ripens into liberation.

Moksha is not what is sometimes imagined. To offer rites for the departed, to perform various ceremonies, does not by itself give a soul liberation. When the body falls, the soul may rise to the higher lokas — to the worlds above, to the realms of the ancestors and the radiant worlds — but to go there is not moksha. The state of moksha is something else: it is when the soul becomes absorbed in Brahm, when it dissolves into Brahm. And a soul becomes absorbed in Brahm only when it attains the knowledge of Brahm.

Nor is moksha possible without the realisation of one's own nature as the soul. This the Gita has already taught us in the sixth chapter: if we wish for liberation, we must take up the awareness of the self. A soul that has not realised its own nature must return to the cycle of birth and death. Where the austerity or the realisation has been left incomplete in one life, the soul that returns will be given helpful, supporting souls in the next, so that it may make the effort again, and again move toward liberation.

And the soul's onward course after the body is not decided for it from outside; the soul itself determines its own course, by its own weight, by how light or how heavy it is, by the coverings that lie upon it. We may send a resolve of goodwill toward a soul, but its course it sets itself. This is why the work of becoming light — of clearing the coverings, of remembering the Supreme with every breath in this city of illusion — is the most important work of all.

◆ Sakshi Insight: “Moksha ki avastha vah hai jab vah atma Brahm leen ho jaati hai, Brahm mein sama jaati hai.”

“The state of liberation is this: when the soul becomes absorbed in Brahm, when it dissolves into Brahm.”

BEYOND THE EIGHTEEN

The Daily Practice — The Meditation on the Self

These teachings were never meant for the intellect alone. Each day, the study closed in meditation — a turning of the knowledge into experience. What follows is that practice, gathered into one place, so that the reader may sit with it as the seekers did each morning.

Close the eyes and let the body become completely relaxed. Loosen every sense. Observe the body where it sits, and as you observe it, let go of each sense one by one. Take a long breath, and slowly release it; with each out-breath, free yourself from worry, from stress, from tension. This life is precious. This body that we have received is an instrument for reaching the Supreme. So do not grieve, do not mourn; be glad that you have received the birth that even the celestial beings long for. For this very life is our sacrifice; this very life is our effort; this very life is our austerity; and through this life we can do the inner work and come to know the Supreme.

Now draw all attention away from the body and gather it between the eyebrows, at the centre of the brow, where the soul resides. See there a point of light. See the soul as pure white light — a shining star, a point of pure white light. Affirm within: I am not this body; I am not the mind; I am not the intellect; I am not these thoughts or feelings. I am the pure conscious supreme soul. I am a soul of the boundless, radiant like countless suns.

See the pure white light flowing out from the soul, filling the whole body, every cell, every pore. Feel that energy within. Feel the vibrations. Feel the power of the soul. As the experience of the soul grows deeper, the pride of the body falls away; the body grows cool, the senses grow still, the mind becomes steady, and the intellect becomes subtle and calm.

With complete surrender — surrender of body, of mind, of soul — turn toward the boundless Supreme Father, the Almighty. See his divine, unmanifest, formbearing aspect in the eye of the intellect. From his radiant form, the boundless light pours down upon you. Affirm: I take refuge in you; I offer my every action, and myself, wholly to you. Feel the full force of that light entering the soul, passing through the centres of the body, illumining the subtle body, the causal body and beyond — until you yourself become a powerhouse of pure white light, taking on the very form of the Supreme Father, filling with his qualities and his knowledge.

Rest in this for a while. Then, before ending, hold a few resolves that the seekers carried daily. Affirm: this is my final birth; I am free of all bondage. Let there be no envy, no resentment, no malice toward anyone, for these drain the power of the soul. Keep the mind pure, for a soiled mind cannot make the journey. We are the fortunate, world-benefiting souls of the boundless; the pen that writes our destiny is in our own hand.

Then, slowly, give the meditation rest. Take a long, deep breath and release it. Rub the palms together, place them gently over the eyes, and within the warmth of the palms, open the eyes. Carry this stillness into the day — and let it return you, each morning, to your own true nature, which is supreme peace.

♦ Sakshi Insight: “Mai yah shareer nahi, mann nahi, buddhi nahi — mai shuddh chetan param atma hu.”

“I am not this body, not the mind, not the intellect — I am the pure conscious supreme soul.”

The following are some of the recurring teachings that arise through these discourses. Each is given first in Hinglish, as it was spoken, followed by its meaning in English.

“Whoever has been born, their death is certain.”

“Every human being is, in truth, a seeker.”

♦ Sakshi Insight: “Bandhan-mukti swayam ki hoti hai, shareer ki nahi.”

“Bondage and liberation belong to the self, not to the body.”

“The mind alone is the cause of bondage; the mind alone is the cause of liberation.”

“Victory over death is, in truth, victory over the fear of death.”

“This very life is our sacrifice, this our effort, this our austerity.”

“Let your every breath be a remembrance of the Supreme.”

“Let the infinite, supreme peace prevail.”

Glossary

Many Hindi and Sanskrit terms carry meanings that no single English word can hold. The definitions below are kept simple and beginner-friendly. Throughout the book, such terms are shown in italics.

Aakaari — The higher subtle, form-bearing aspect of the Supreme, as distinct from the formless and the embodied.

Adharma — Unrighteousness; conduct contrary to the principles of truth and the soul.

Antahkaran — The inner instrument — the inner being made of mind, intellect and impressions, whose purification is essential.

Apara Prakriti — The lower, material nature of the Supreme — the five senses together with mind, intellect and ego.

Asuri Sampad — Demonic wealth; the corrupted tendency within a person that takes the perishable world to be everything.

Atma — The soul; the true self. Its original state is a point of pure white light, formless and in the form of energy.

Avyakt — The unmanifest; the invisible subtle and supreme-subtle worlds of creation.

Behad — The boundless, endless, limitless. It refers to the worlds of creation beyond ordinary imagination.

Behad Gyan — The supreme knowledge of the Supreme Father and his boundless, infinite creation, revealed by Bapuji.

Behad ki Atma — Souls constituted of supreme light and supreme great elements; very powerful souls, called the Behad souls.

Bhakti Yog — The path of devotion — reaching the Supreme through love and complete surrender.

Bhavatit — Beyond all feelings and emotions.

Brahm — The supreme reality; the imperishable, all-pervading absolute into which the liberated soul dissolves.

Brahmand — Solar system.

Daivi Sampad — Divine wealth; the godly tendency within a person that leads the soul toward the Supreme.

Dharma — Righteousness; the living practice of the principles one has understood.

Dharana — The settled state in which, after steady practice, the soul transforms its impressions and its true divinity emerges.

Dhyan Yog — The path of meditation — one-pointed absorption upon the soul, connecting with the Supreme.

Gunatit / Nirgun — Beyond all qualities of nature; the pure soul-conscious, formless state.

Gyan Yog — The path of knowledge — continual contemplation upon the soul and the Supreme until realisation.

Had ki Atma — Common souls created at a lower level, of low power, entangled in worldly affairs.

Indriya — The senses, whose contacts with objects bring pleasure and pain and must be mastered.

Jeevan Mukti — Liberation-in-life; the high state in which the soul, free of all karmic accounts, abides in its creator.

Karan Sharir — The causal body, the store-house of a soul's karmic records and impressions; in essence one with the mind.

Karma Yog — The path of action — performing one's duty in a spirit of desireless action, offered to the Supreme.

Karmatit — Beyond all karmic bondage; free of every type of karmic account in any plane of creation.

Kshetra — The field — this body and the changing world.

Kshetragya — The knower of the field — the conscious soul aware of the body and the world.

Kurukshetra — The field of battle; within a person, the state in which the demonic tendency has grown dominant.

Maha Brahmand — Galaxy.

Maya — Illusion; the world-appearance that draws the soul away from the Supreme.

Mayajeet — A conqueror of Maya; one who has overcome the world of illusion.

Moksha — Liberation; the state in which the soul becomes absorbed in Brahm.

Mukti — Freedom; the stage when the soul no longer exists separately in creation and dissolves in its creator.

Niraakaar — The formless, incorporeal aspect of the Supreme, in the form of pure light.

Nishkaam Karma — Desireless action; action performed without selfish motive, with the fruit left to the Supreme.

Para Prakriti — The higher, conscious nature of the Supreme — the living soul-power.

Param Shanti — Supreme peace; the original state of the soul, which the soul therefore always seeks.

Param Maha Brahmand — Universe.

Paramatma — The Supreme Soul; the creator of souls, the Supreme Father.

Paramdham — The supreme abode; the highest dimension of a creation, the abode of the incorporeal Supreme Soul.

Prakriti — Nature, with its three qualities; also the material principle as distinct from the conscious spirit.

Purush — The conscious spirit, the witness, as distinct from nature.

Purushartha — Spiritual effort made to understand the soul through self-enquiry and meditation.

Saadhak — A seeker; one who strives for self-realisation and the attainment of the Supreme.

Saakaari — The embodied, physical form.

Saguna — The Supreme conceived with form and qualities, as distinct from the formless (nirguna).

Sankalp — Intention or resolve — the cause; in these teachings, of the nature of the air element.

Sankhya Yog — The Yog of knowledge — the second chapter's teaching on the body and the embodied.

samskaras — The character of a soul, recorded in its causal body; the root cause of the cycle of birth and death.

Sanyas — Renunciation; the inner letting-go of attachment and the fruit of action.

Sattva, Rajas, Tamas — The three qualities of nature — purity, passion and inertia — which bind the soul to the body.

Shariri — The embodied; the one who dwells within the body — the soul, the seer.

Soham — The awareness 'I am That' — the feeling in which the wise one dissolves the mind.

Spandan — Vibration — the effect that follows from intention (sankalp).

Trigunatit — The state of one who has gone beyond all three qualities of nature.

Vairagya — Dispassion; detachment from sense-objects, by which, with practice, self-restraint is gained.

Vibhuti — Divine glory or manifestation, as described by the Supreme in the tenth chapter.

Vishaad — Despair; Arjuna's sorrow in the first chapter.

Vishwaroop — The cosmic form of the Supreme, seen only through a divine eye.

Vritti — Tendency; the inclinations lodged within the inner being and the causal body.

Vyakt — The manifest; the visible world of the five elements.

Yagna — Sacrifice; here, action and the soul's effort to reach the Supreme offered in a spirit of sacrifice.

Yog — Connection with the Supreme; the state in which the soul, immersed in love for its creator, forgets the physical world.

Yogeshwar — The Lord of Yog — a name of Krishna, who can himself bestow the capacity for Yog.

Yugantar — A cycle of ages; the long spans across which the resolve for liberation is carried.

Soon... THE WORLD WILL KNOW

An upcoming spiritual biographical film based on the divine life, journey, and realisation of the ultimate truth by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel. The film traces Bapuji's extraordinary path — from a young soul who questioned God about the suffering of humanity, to the supreme spiritual realisation of Param Shanti — the Antim Param Satya: the final, supreme truth.
