ABOUT BAPUJI

Bapuji (full name: Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel, also lovingly addressed as “Dadaji” by the younger generation) was born in 1956 in the small village of Akhaj in the Mehsana district of Gujarat. However, he spent his childhood in another village named Ambasan, also located in the Mehsana district.

In the earlier phase of his life, he was a highly successful lawyer. Later, he devoted his life to realising the supreme spiritual truth and bringing this divine knowledge forward for the welfare of humanity. Today, this supreme knowledge serves as a guiding light for true seekers to realise their ultimate destiny. It is a blessing of the highest divinity that the present time is witnessing the rise of this supreme spiritual knowledge, guiding souls on Earth to return to their original source.

Despite being raised in a very poor family and facing challenging circumstances, Bapuji had a deep desire to transform this sorrowful and suffering world into a better place. At the young age of six, he questioned God repeatedly, asking why God remained silent about the suffering of humanity. This intense longing to end human suffering eventually led him to attain the highest level of spirituality later in life.

Even as a child, Bapuji would spend hours alone in the fields, often neglecting his own comfort. Due to poverty, he would walk barefoot without shoes or sandals, frequently getting pricked by thorns. Many times, he would stay late in the fields and, on his way back home, encounter subtle world entities. These experiences sparked his interest in communicating with subtle world souls.

Bapuji was courageous from a young age, which helped him overcome many obstacles. Alongside his studies in chartered accountancy (CA), he gave tuition classes to support himself financially. Later, he completed his Bachelor of Law (LLB) degree and became a well-known lawyer in Ahmedabad.

In 1997, Bapuji established a spiritual institution called “Vishwa Parivartak Ishwariya Vidhyalay” in Chenpur, Ahmedabad, with the mission of transforming this mortal world, filled with suffering and disorder, into an eternal divine world of immortality. Smt. Sushma Tandon, lovingly known as “Maa”, worked alongside Bapuji in this grand divine mission.

To accomplish this mission, Bapuji worked tirelessly, dedicating all his resources to this divine purpose. During that time, he would deliver continuous spiritual discourses for up to 18 hours without rest. In these discourses, he explained the highest dimensions of divine knowledge, which he realised through deep meditation and divine vision in a state of superconsciousness. This knowledge goes beyond the imagination of the ordinary human mind.

Bapuji’s teachings cover a vast range of topics, including the types of celestial creators across different dimensions, the creation of our Brahmand (solar system), Maha Brahmand (galaxy), and Param Maha Brahmand (universe), and most importantly, the transcendental knowledge of the multiverse and realities beyond it. His knowledge is supremely profound and is intended for highly evolved seekers, referred to as behad souls. According to Bapuji, these behad souls will play a key role in transforming this mortal world into an eternal divine realm.

At present, Bapuji remains deeply engaged in intense meditation and samadhi for long hours. He does not meet anyone, as he is continuously immersed in his transcendental mission in a superconscious state.

— by Bapuji Dashrathbhai Patel

Of all the burdens a human being carries through life, stress is among the heaviest — and the least understood. We worry about the body, about money, about relationships, about the state of the world. We take medicines to sleep, we take holidays to escape, and still the restlessness follows us wherever we go. Why? Because stress does not live in our circumstances. Stress lives in the mind.

This book gathers Bapuji’s teachings on the stress-free life into a single, simple, and complete journey. It begins by showing what stress really is and where it is truly born — in deh abhiman (body-identity), in attachment, and in expectation. It then reveals the science of freedom: the realisation “I am a soul”, the witness state, the dissolving of the mind into its source, and the surrender called Manmanabhav. Finally, it gives the daily practices — truth, pure food, silence, discipline, and elevated thought — through which peace stops being an occasional visitor and becomes your permanent nature.

Every teaching here is drawn faithfully from Bapuji’s own spoken discourses and the live classes of his channel.

Nothing has been added from outside, and nothing of his meaning has been changed. The only work done has been to arrange his words into a calm, clear order so that even a complete newcomer can follow the path step by step.

Read this book slowly and peacefully. Let each chapter settle before moving to the next. The mind that learns to rest in the soul has already stepped out of stress — and into Param Shanti, the supreme peace that was always its own true nature.

CHAPTER ONE

The Mind Is Bondage, the Mind Is Freedom

Where does stress begin? Most people believe it begins outside — in a difficult boss, in an unpaid bill, in a family quarrel, in the disturbing news of the world. Bapuji teaches something completely different. Stress does not begin in circumstances. Stress begins in the mind. And therefore freedom from stress does not begin in circumstances either. It begins in the mind.

This is the heart of Bapuji's science of the mind: the mind itself is bondage, and the mind itself is freedom. The mind that runs out into the objects of the world becomes the cause of bondage. The very same mind, when it comes to rest in the atma — the soul — becomes the door of liberation. The ancient seers (Rishis) said the same in one line: the mind alone is the cause of both the bondage and the freedom of human beings.

To understand this, we must understand what the mind is. The mind is not the brain, and it is not the body. The mind belongs to the soul. Within the soul there are three connected powers: man (the mind, which thinks and desires), buddhi (the intellect, which discerns and decides), and sanskar (the deep impressions the soul carries). The impressions shape the intellect; the intellect guides the mind; and the mind directs our actions in the world.

This order contains the whole secret of the stress-free life. When the sanskars are purified, the intellect becomes clear. When the intellect becomes clear, the mind becomes peaceful. And when the mind becomes peaceful, the soul begins to experience its own true nature. A person's stress, therefore, is never really about the outer situation. It is about the condition of the mind that meets the situation. When the soul is pure and strong, the mind is clear and powerful. When the soul is covered and weighed down, the mind becomes restless and weak — and restlessness is simply another name for stress.

The inner order of the soul — purify the sanskars, and the mind becomes peaceful.

So the journey of this book is ultimately a journey of the mind: from a mind that runs, worries, and breaks under the weight of the world, to a mind that rests, shines with inner clarity, and remains unshaken by any circumstance. The world will remain the world. But the mind that encounters it can be completely transformed.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Mann hi bandhan hai, mann hi mukti hai. Jo mann vishayon mein daudta hai, wo bandhan ka kaaran banta hai. Jo mann atma mein thehrta hai, wahi mukti ka dwar hai.”

“The mind itself is bondage, and the mind itself is freedom. The mind that runs into the objects of the world becomes the cause of bondage. The mind that comes to rest in the soul is itself the door of liberation.”

CHAPTER TWO

Sorrow Is Not Outside — the Root Is Attachment

Here is a truth so simple that we miss it our whole lives: sorrow is not outside. The source of sorrow is the attachment of the mind. And freedom is not outside either. Freedom lies in changing the direction of the mind.

Watch how stress is actually born. The mind decides how something should be — and when it does not happen that way, stress is born.

The moment the mind has gripped a thing, sorrow is waiting there. “This is my son — why does he not listen to me? This is my boss — why does he treat me like this? These are my neighbours, my friends, my relations — why are they like this?” Wherever there is aasakti — attachment, the grip of “mine” — sorrow must arise. It cannot be avoided, because the grip itself is the wound.

Bapuji’s knowledge states this with perfect clarity: Ichha Matram Avidya — desire itself is a form of ignorance. Driven by desire, the mind constantly runs after temporary and passing things, believing that fulfilment lies somewhere outside itself. Yet every attachment and every unfulfilled desire becomes a fresh cause of suffering. The mind chases, the world keeps changing, and the chase itself becomes stress.

Understand what this means for your daily life. You do not need the world to become perfect before you can experience peace.

You need the mind to stop gripping. The same house, the same office, the same family that feel like a burden today can feel light tomorrow—not because they have changed, but because the direction of the mind has changed.

The mind that was flowing outward, grasping at objects and people, turns inward towards the soul. That single turn is the beginning of the end of stress.

When the soul deeply understands this truth, it gradually gains mastery over the mind and becomes free from the whole cycle of desire and sorrow. Sorrow ends where the grip ends. Freedom begins where the turning begins.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Dukh bahar nahi hai — dukh ka strot mann ki aasakti hai. Mukti bahar nahi hai — mukti mann ki disha badalne mein hai.”

“Sorrow is not outside — the source of sorrow is the attachment of the mind. Freedom is not outside — freedom lies in changing the direction of the mind.”

CHAPTER THREE

The Three Chains — Body-Identity, Attachment, Expectation

Why does a human being weep? Why does stress return again and again, in every stage of life, no matter how much we achieve? Bapuji's teaching gives the answer with complete precision. A human being suffers because he is bound by three chains.

The first chain is deh abhiman — body-identity, the deep belief "I am this body." From this one belief comes all fear: the fear of death, the fear of illness, the fear of insult, and the fear of loss. Whoever believes he is the body must live in fear, because the body is fragile and passing.

The second chain is moh — attachment, the belief "this is mine." My family, my money, my reputation, my relationships, my wishes. From "mine" comes sorrow, because everything called "mine" can change, disappoint, or depart.

The third chain is apeksha — expectation, the demand "everything should happen according to me." And when the world does not run according to us — which it never fully does — the mind breaks and the eyes weep.

The three chains from which all stress is born.

Now see the deeper truth beneath all three. In this world, happiness changes, sorrow changes, relationships change, bodies change, circumstances change, time itself changes. Those who search for permanent happiness in changing things — their weeping never fully ends. This is not pessimism (negativity); it is simple observation. You cannot build a steady house on moving water.

Therefore the weeping of man does not end when the outer world is fixed. The weeping of man ends when his vision changes. When the soul forgets its own identity, the world makes it weep. When the soul recognises its identity, the very same world becomes its teacher. The three chains are not cut by fighting the world. They are cut by remembering who you are — which is where the next chapters take us.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Jo badalne wali cheezon mein sthayi sukh dhoondte hain, unka rona kabhi poori tarah khatam nahi hota.”

CHAPTER FOUR

The Prison of Fear

If stress had one root deeper than all others, it would be fear. And Bapuji's teaching exposes fear at its very source, in a chain so clear that once you see it, you can never unsee it: when a person believes he is only the body, fear enters. From fear comes greed. From greed comes injustice. From injustice comes unrest. And from unrest, the whole world becomes sorrowful. Every layer of stress in human life — personal, social, worldly — grows from that first seed of fear.

The chain of fear — how one belief becomes the unrest of the whole world.

Now look at how fear is fed in daily life. The greatest burden of falsehood is fear. A person who lies must be afraid every moment that his lie will be caught. He must remember his own words, guard the web he has spun, and live on watch. But the truthful person is fearless — because he has nothing at all to hide.

There is even a physics to this. The vibration of falsehood is heavy, murky, and restless; it fills the speaker himself with unease. The vibration of truth is light, clean, and calm. This is why the truthful person carries a distinct radiance, and why there is peace in his very presence.

Fearlessness is the greatest freedom. The day a person resolves, “I will stand with truth, whatever the consequence,” that very day he walks out of the biggest jail in the world — the jail of fear. No court releases him; his own resolve releases him.

And there is a still deeper reason why truth frees us from stress. The very nature of the soul is truth. When we lie, we go against our own soul — and that is why a thorn keeps pricking within. But when we live with truth, we become one with our own original nature — and only then does that deep peace descend within, which is called Param Shanti. Fear is the prison. Truth is the door. The soul is the free being who walks out.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Jhooth ka sabse bada bojh hai bhay. Nirbhayata hi sabse badi swatantrata hai — jis din tum satya ke saath khade ho gaye, us din tum bhay ki jail se mukt ho gaye.”

“The greatest burden of falsehood is fear. Fearlessness is the greatest freedom — the day you stand with truth, that day you walk free of the jail of fear.”

CHAPTER FIVE

How the Mind Loses Its Power

A weak mind feels stress; a powerful mind dissolves it. So we must ask: why do most people find their mind weak, scattered, and tired? The mind is energised by the soul — its strength flows from the soul's own light. Yet that power drains away, and Bapuji shows exactly how.

The first drain is excess thinking. When the mind runs without rest, producing thought after thought in endless motion, it burns through its own energy. Speed without stillness is not strength — it is exhaustion. The faster the mind races, the weaker it becomes. Overthinking does not sharpen the mind; it depletes it. Just as a river that spreads too wide loses its depth and force, a mind that thinks too much loses its clarity and power. Rest is not laziness — it is the mind's most essential source of renewal.

The second and deeper drain is negative thinking. While excess thinking exhausts the mind gradually, negativity drains it with alarming speed. Every negative thought pulls energy out of the mind and pours it into the gross world, which swallows it endlessly. Positive thinking builds strength slowly; negative thinking destroys far faster. This is why a single day of fear, anger, or despair can leave a person feeling completely emptied, while rebuilding inner strength takes long and patient effort. To protect the mind's power, first protect the quality of your thoughts.

And these thoughts do not simply pass and vanish. Our ignorance, our negative thoughts, our negative emotions, the shouting and crying within — all of it leaves its mark upon the subtle body and the karan sharir — the causal body, the deep storehouse of the soul. No pharmaceutical pill can clean that depth. A tablet may put the brain to sleep for a night, but it cannot touch the subtle body. For that, the only path is spirituality — adhyatm — the inner science. If we truly wish to change, we must bring peace from within—for no one else can do this work for us.

No outer person, by placing a hand upon our head, can do it for us.

Behind both drains stands one simple law. The mind becomes weak when the soul becomes body-conscious — when it forgets its true self and identifies with the body, with fear, with attachment. And the mind becomes powerful when the soul becomes soul-conscious. The condition of the mind follows the condition of the soul. Which is why the first real step out of stress is not a technique at all — it is a remembrance. That remembrance is the next chapter.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Zyada sochte hain, negative sochte hain, to mann ki gati zyada chalti hai aur mann ki shakti khatam ho jaati hai.”

“When we think too much and think negatively, the mind races — and its power is destroyed.”

CHAPTER SIX

The First Step — “I Am a Soul”

If the mind has lost its power, how is it restored? Bapuji teaches that the very first step — before any technique, before any practice — is one realisation: I am a soul.

“I am not this body. I am the atma — a pure point of conscious white light.” This single realisation is the beginning of all mastery over the mind, and therefore the beginning of the end of stress. When the soul turns inward and becomes aware of itself, its inner light begins to return. And as the soul’s awareness grows, the mind grows powerful again — for the strength of the mind is simply the power of the soul flowing through it. The moment the soul stands in its own truth, the mind begins to come back to life.

This is why Bapuji places such emphasis on rising above body-consciousness. As long as the soul is sunk in the body and its worries, the mind stays weak and reactive — every event shakes it. The practice, therefore, is remembrance, again and again, through the day: I am not the body. I am a soul — a divine soul, a conscious soul. As this remembrance deepens, something within is switched on: the inner mind blossoms, clarity comes, and an unfamiliar steadiness begins to stand under all your thoughts.

Say these words with full awareness, and notice what begins to dissolve: I am not this body. I am not limited to name, position, money, prestige, or relationships. I am conscious. I am eternal. I am the soul whose very form is peace. Each phrase unties one of the three chains. “Not the body” dissolves fear. “Not limited to name and possessions” dissolves attachment. “Eternal, whose form is peace” dissolves expectation — for what can the changing world add to, or take from, that which is already whole?

When the soul forgets this identity, the world makes it weep. When the soul remembers it, the same world becomes a school. Nothing outside needs to change first. The remembrance itself is the first step — and every later step in this book stands upon it.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Mann ki shakti badhaane ke liye, pehle atma ko anubhav karo — main atma hoon.”

“To increase the power of the mind, first experience the soul — I am a soul.”

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Witness — That Which Watches Never Changes

Now comes the discovery that transforms stress at its very root. Look carefully at your own experience. The body changes — childhood, youth, old age. Thoughts change — morning's worry is gone by evening. Feelings change — joy, anger, sadness, calm. Circumstances change without asking your permission. Everything changes — but the one who watches all of it does not change. That unchanging seer is the sakshi atma — the witness soul.

Bapuji teaches that the soul is the Sakshi-Drashta — the witness and observer of all its coverings: the body, the subtle body, the causal body, every layer gathered on its long journey. A witness can only observe what is separate from itself. Therefore the soul is not the body, not the mind, not the coverings — it is the conscious being that observes them all.

Even our everyday language secretly admits this. We say “my body.” But if this is my body, then clearly I am not the body — I am the owner who inhabits and uses it. As this awareness grows natural, a witness consciousness develops on its own. The soul begins to watch thoughts and experiences from a place of inner stillness, instead of being swept away by them. In deep remembrance the seeker gradually experiences himself as separate from his thoughts: I am not the thoughts. The mind is only an instrument — the real being is far deeper.

See what this does to stress. Stress needs you to be inside the storm. The witness stands where the storm is seen but cannot reach. This is why the true knower can look at the world without breaking: he watches as a witness, remains peaceful within — and still works fully. Witnessing is neither indifference nor escape. The hands keep working; only the inner seat of awareness has shifted.

And as the witness state deepens, a natural vairagya — dispassion — dawns towards the temporary world. Not a forced renunciation, but a quiet understanding rising from within: lasting fulfilment cannot be found in what is temporary by nature. True and lasting fulfilment lies only in the soul's own eternal nature — which was always there, waiting to be remembered.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Sharir badalta hai, vichar badalte hain, bhavnayein badalti hain, parasthitiyan badalti hain — kintu dekhne wala nahi badalta. Yahi sakshi atma hai.”

“The body changes, thoughts change, feelings change, circumstances change — but the one who watches does not change. That is the witness soul.”

CHAPTER EIGHT

Fire Without Fuel — Dissolving the Mind into Its Source

How is a restless mind actually quietened? Here the ancient wisdom and Bapuji's science speak with one voice, in one perfect image: just as a fire without fuel becomes calm by itself, so the mind becomes calm in its own source. You do not beat a fire into stillness. You simply stop feeding it — and it settles on its own.

Therefore the instruction is exact: the mind is not to be suppressed. The mind is to be dissolved into its source. This is yog; this is dhyan. Every attempt to forcefully silence the mind only creates more resistance, more tension, more noise. The mind is not won by fighting it — it is won by transcending it. It is not suppressed — it is absorbed. It is not controlled — it is transformed. The mind's source is the soul; make the mind atma-sth — seated in the soul — and its fuel of restlessness is gone.

This is the essence of the vision of Param Shanti that Bapuji teaches through his science of the mind. Bapuji says, “The mind is bondage, and the mind is liberation.” A mind that constantly runs after the objects of the senses becomes the cause of bondage. The same mind, when it becomes still and rests in the soul, becomes the gateway to liberation.

The ancients also gave the gradual ladder by which this settling happens, and it is completely practical: tap purifies the chitt. When the chitt is purified, sattva rises.

When sattva rises, the mind begins to steady. When the mind steadies, the light of the soul is reflected in it. And when the soul is realised, the futility of chasing the world becomes self-evident. Here tap means sincere inner effort and discipline, chitt the inner field of consciousness, and sattva the pure, luminous quality of nature.

The gradual ascent — from tap to freedom from the world's pull.

You will know sattva is rising by unmistakable signs: solitude begins to feel pleasant. Deep thoughts feel good. The intellect turns towards knowledge. Yog feels good, pure thoughts feel good — and hearing or speaking of bad things stops being interesting. The taste of the mind itself changes.

On this path the ancients described six limbs — stages of inner transformation — pranayam; pratyahar, turning the consciousness inward, away from its endless outward flow; dharana, gathering the mind's scattered energy upon one point, where the collection of inner power begins; dhyan, the unbroken flow of that remembrance, like current flowing all day from a powerhouse — “I am a divine soul” remembered in everything; tark, which is viveka — the discernment of true from false, lasting from passing, without which even meditation stays incomplete; and samadhi — which is no mysterious miracle, but simply rest in the soul. Their single purpose: to free the mind from its unrest and return it to the soul.

As the practice deepens, watch what happens: the speed of the mind slows, the clamour of thoughts grows quiet, desires lose their pull, the ego loosens. And in that state the seeker experiences, for the first time, that he is not the mind. This is the melting of the mind and the rising of the soul — and it is the deepest meaning of a stress-free life.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Just as a fire without fuel becomes calm, so the mind becomes calm in its own source. The mind is not to be suppressed — the mind is to be dissolved into its source. This is yog; this is dhyan.”

CHAPTER NINE

Manmanabhav — Won by Surrender, Not by Force

The Gita gives one simple and profound key to the restless mind: Manmanabhav — “give your mind to Me.” Bapuji explains that this single teaching contains the entire secret of mind-mastery, and therefore the entire secret of freedom from stress.

The mind, left to itself, is endlessly restless. Like a mad monkey leaping from branch to branch, like a wild horse that cannot be reined in, it keeps running — from thought to thought, from desire to desire, from worry to worry. It cannot be tamed by struggle. It cannot be silenced by force. No amount of willpower or wrestling will truly still it; every attempt only stirs it further.

There is only one thing that truly works — surrender. When the mind is offered to the Supreme (Almighty), when it is lovingly given over to pure consciousness rather than held and fought over, it finds what it was always searching for. It finds rest. It finds home. “You give Me your mind,” says the Lord — not as a demand, but as an invitation. And in that simple, total giving, the restlessness dissolves, the running stops, and a stillness arrives that no personal effort could ever have produced. Manmanabhav is not a technique. It is a relationship — the deepest relationship the soul can have.

Bapuji also reveals the natural sequence by which this transformation unfolds. First comes true knowledge — gyan — which enables the soul to practise yog, living connection with the Supreme, in the correct way. Through that connection, spiritual power begins to flow into the deeper layers of the soul, gradually cleansing the causal body of its accumulated vikarm — the record of wrong actions. As those impressions are purified, the soul becomes lighter, the mind grows peaceful and stable, and genuine mastery becomes possible. Knowledge, connection, power, purification — without this process, lasting peace of mind cannot be achieved; with it, peace becomes inevitable.

And Bapuji adds one teaching of immense healing power: the thoughtless state is the deepest healing state for the causal body. When the mind becomes completely quiet, free from the continuous flow of thoughts, the deepest layers of the soul begin to heal and cleanse themselves. So the goal is never to battle the mind. Connect it to the higher power, let it fall naturally still — and in that stillness, the deepest purification and the deepest healing quietly take place.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Tu mann mujhe de de — Manmanabhav. Mann tera markat hai, ghode ki tarah daudta rehta hai.”

“Give your mind to Me — this is Manmanabhav. Your mind is a restless monkey; it keeps running like a horse.”

CHAPTER TEN

Sthit Pragya — Steady Within, Active Without

Many people fear that a stress-free life means a passive life — that to be peaceful one must withdraw from work, family, and responsibility. The Gita destroys this idea in its very first scene. The Gita begins exactly where you are: Arjun stands on the battlefield of life, looking at everything before him, broken by grief. And Krishna does not let him run away. The answer to a broken world is not escape.

The answer is one line: do your work — and let go of anxiety about the fruit. Karm kar, phal ki chinta chhod. This is the exact instruction for working in a difficult world without breaking. Act fully; grip nothing. Effort is in your hands; results never were. Stress lives precisely in that gap — in demanding command over what was never ours to command.

The Gita's name for the person who has mastered this is sthit pragya — the one of steady wisdom. His definition is the definition of the stress-free human being: when happiness comes, he is not swept away; when sorrow comes, he does not break. Steady within, fully active without — working like a witness, complete on the outside, untouched on the inside.

Understand clearly what is being promised. A stress-free life does not mean a difficulty-free life. It means: difficulty will come, but the inner foundation will not break. Loss will come, but the soul will not scatter. Insult will come, but peace will not leave. Even death will appear — but the remembrance of the immortal soul will remain. The storms are not cancelled; the tree has simply grown roots the storm cannot reach.

So the path is never to flee the world, and never to bow to it either. Remain joined — and remain anasakt, unattached. Work without attachment, serve, hold to dharma — and drop the grip on the fruit. This is how a soul stands in the middle of the marketplace, the office, the family — busy, responsible, engaged — and still remains as calm as a lamp in a windless place.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

From Complaint to Sadhana — “What Must I Learn from This?”

There is a hidden hinge on which the whole of life turns. On one side of it stands the question “why me?” — and with it complaint, bitterness, and stress. On the other side stands a different question — and with it peace. Bapuji’s teaching moves us from one side to the other.

First, the foundation. Whatever comes before the soul — every situation, every difficulty — is only the result of its own past actions. Nothing that happens to us belongs to anyone else. It is always, and only, our own account coming back to us. This is not a harsh idea; it is the most liberating idea in existence. If my situation is my own account, then no person and no fate holds the key to my peace. The key returns to my own hand.

This is why a truly high-quality soul, when it sees pain — in its own life or in the world — does not simply complain or blame. It turns inward and thinks: “I must change.” This is the mark of a mature soul. The transformation of the world does not begin outside; it begins with the transformation of one’s own mind. Change the mind first, and everything else follows. The outer world is only a reflection of the inner.

Now the hinge itself. The weeping of man ends when, inside him, desire gives way to acceptance, attachment gives way to love, fear gives way to soul-remembrance — and complaint gives way to sadhana. Practically, it is this:

when the voice within stops asking “why is this happening to me?” and begins asking “what must I learn from this?” — that very moment, everything changes its nature. Tears themselves become prayer. Sorrow itself becomes awakening. And life stops being a journey of weeping and becomes a journey of recognising the soul.

Hold the final truth of this chapter like a lamp: the weeping of man will not end when the world ends its troubles. It will end when ignorance ends. When ignorance ends, weeping ends. When the soul awakens, the crying falls silent. When the memory of the supreme truth returns, the mind becomes still. And when Param Shanti awakens within, the soul lives in the middle of the world — and weeps no more, but gives light.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Truth Makes You Fearless

We saw in Chapter Four that fear is the deepest root of stress, and that truth is the door out of fear's prison. Now Bapuji's teaching shows how to actually live that truth, day by day, until fearlessness becomes your ordinary state.

First, understand how wide truth really is. Truth is not merely "not telling lies." Truth is seeing things as they are, accepting them as they are, and living in accordance with them. Truth is the oneness of your inside and your outside. The person who carries one thing in the mind, another on the tongue, and a third in his actions is a person divided into three pieces — and a divided person can never be strong, and never be at peace. His three parts grind against each other all day; that grinding is stress.

The power of the truthful person is born precisely from unity: his mind, word, and deed flow in one single direction. And when these three become one, such energy appears within a human being that no outer force can shake him.

Remember also the exchange rate that the whole world keeps misreading: the convenience of a lie is momentary, and its sorrow is permanent. The hardship of truth is momentary, and its happiness is permanent. Every lie buys a small comfort now and installs a long anxiety afterwards. Every truth costs a small discomfort now and buys a lasting rest.

How to begin? Begin with one small step. First, stop lying to yourself. Then bring your words into line with your actions. One step, one day at a time — and one day, truth is no longer your effort; it is your nature. And practise the Gita's vani ki tapasya — the austerity of speech: speech that hurts no one, that is true, that is pleasant, and that is beneficial. Speak truth in such a way that it does not wound, but shows the way.

Truth is not the path of the weak; it is the path of the bravest. Every great soul in this world became great through the power of truth. No matter how vast or powerful falsehood may appear, in the end it collapses like a castle built on sand. So do not be afraid. Stand firmly with the truth, for the one who stands with truth stands with the strength of the entire universe. A life built like this needs no guard, no mask, and no memory of its own stories — and so it carries no fear.

Truth is Shiv. Truth is beautiful. Truth is the very door of Param Shanti.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Where does truth ultimately lead

What is gained by living truthfully? Why should we choose truth even when it is difficult?

The purpose of living in truth is not merely to become an honest person. It is to prepare the soul to realize the Supreme Truth—the eternal reality that sustains the entire universe. As truth becomes your way of life, spiritual power accumulates within the soul, and its original memory begins to awaken. That awakening reveals your true nature: not merely a body or personality, but the pure, eternal, divine consciousness—the Light that is your real identity. This realization is the foundation of liberation.

Humanity has praised truth for centuries, yet few have sought the Supreme Truth to which all truth points. It is not enough to admire truth; we must know it, live it, and realize it. Without discovering the Supreme Truth, even our practice of truth remains incomplete. The highest purpose of truth is to lead us back to our eternal Self. The moment one realizes, accepts, and lives as the soul—recognizing one's true, eternal nature—the path to liberation becomes certain.

A truthful person undoubtedly lives a noble life and avoids creating many karmic bonds. But truth itself is pointing beyond itself. It is directing us toward the Supreme Truth—the One who sustains and governs the entire universe.

This is the unique insight that Bapuji's Divine Knowledge offers: do not stop at truth as a moral principle. Go further. Know the Supreme Truth—the Supreme Consciousness behind all creation. The universe is not running by accident. There is an Intelligence that sustains it, an eternal presence that governs it. To know that, is the highest purpose of human life.

The purpose of life is to know this Supreme Truth and live in harmony with it. To realize your true Self is not to inflate the ego, but to awaken the soul to its eternal nature. This realization leads toward the Supreme Light and ultimately to liberation.

Yet this journey is not meant for personal salvation alone. It is a commitment to the welfare of the entire world. Bapuji teaches that we should dedicate our body, mind, intellect, wealth, abilities, relationships, and time to the service of humanity while the opportunity still exists. Time is precious, and spiritual effort should begin before old age, when strength and opportunity are still with us.

As long as we are on Earth, we should perform the highest actions, move ever closer to the Supreme Truth, and contribute to the upliftment of the world.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

As Is the Food, So Becomes the Mind

A stress-free mind is not built by thought alone. Bapuji teaches that the quality of the mind is shaped directly by how we live — and two things touch it most directly: the food we eat, and the actions we perform.

There is an old and true saying: as is the food, so becomes the mind. Jaisa ann, waisa mann. Sattvic food — pure, light, clean food — helps create a peaceful and positive mind. Heavy or impure food clouds the mind; pure food clears it. Even what we drink affects our inner state. Foods that are heavy and tamasic by nature lower the mind's vibration. This is why yogis eat very little — not out of deprivation, but as a conscious choice to keep the body light and under control, so that the mind remains clear and focused.

Actions work the same way. When we do good deeds for others, the mind grows stronger. The chain is simple: good food supports a good intellect, a good intellect supports a pure mind — and so the mind's power rises. Positivity is not a mood; it is a discipline — a conscious, daily choice to think cleanly, speak cleanly, and live cleanly. The mind is rebuilt not in a single moment of resolve, but through the patient, steady practice of clean food, clean conduct, and clean thought, sustained day after day. A strong mind is not given — it is built.

One warning saves years of frustration: never confuse discipline with suppression. When a desire is forcefully suppressed rather than truly cleared, its energy does not disappear — it simply changes form, most commonly into anger. This is why people who crush their desires by force are so often quick-tempered. Energy cannot be destroyed; the record itself must be cleared from within — gently, by knowledge and connection, as this book has shown.

And let no one tell you that this pure life requires leaving your home. The Gita honours the householder's life — grihastha ashram — as the greatest of all paths. Many have misled people into believing that marriage and family are obstacles to peace. The truth is the exact opposite: to live within family life while remaining inwardly established as the soul, constantly remembering God, is the highest karmayogi life of all. What matters is not whether you live in a home or a monastery. What matters is one simple thing: whether you are living as the soul — awake, aware, and connected to your true nature in every moment.

“As is the food you eat, so the mind becomes.”

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

Silence, Solitude, and the Discipline of the Day

Where does the mind refill its power? Bapuji's answer is precise: the mind recovers its strength in silence and solitude — and loses it in noise and crowds. When a soul withdraws into silence, the mind gathers itself and rebuilds its energy. Crowded places and constant social noise scatter and drain it. This is why a day full of talk leaves us empty, and one quiet hour leaves us full.

From this comes very practical guidance: fewer words, softer speech, and less unnecessary contact. Speaking less, speaking gently, speaking truth, and avoiding needless social entanglement all protect the mind's power. And beware of showmanship and the craving for approval — the more a person performs for others and depends on their applause, the more his inner ground is shaken.

To this silence, add discipline — for on this path, honesty and discipline are essential; without them you will not last long. Make one unbreakable resolve: "One hour is mine — no one can take it from me." One hour of gyan yog — knowledge and remembrance — every single day, whatever happens. Two hours is better; three, better still. And Bapuji's complete ideal for the day is this: eight hours of gyan yog, eight hours of duty and work, and eight hours of rest. A life divided in this way has no room left for stress to live in.

Bapuji's ideal day — eight hours gyan yog, eight hours duty, eight hours rest.

Be patient with yourself. Long practice is needed — just as a doctor practises for twenty years before becoming a master, so mastery on this path comes with long, steady practice. Some days sattva will rise in you, some days rajo, some days tamo; some days the mind will even say, “leave all this.” Understand in that moment: this is only the mind, moved by the atmosphere around it. Do not worry. There is no need for anxiety or impatience. Go slowly. The mind does not transform in a single day — and that is perfectly fine. Little by little, its restlessness fades, and a deep, steady, unshakeable peace settles within — quietly and naturally, like light filling a room at dawn.

And as soul-consciousness grows through this daily rhythm, something beautiful happens on its own: the mind becomes desireless. The restless reaching, the constant craving, the endless search for more quietly settles — with no force, no suppression, no struggle. The soul, resting in its own awareness, no longer needs the noise, the validation, or the approval it once chased. This is not emptiness. This is fullness. The mind that has come home to the soul lacks nothing and needs nothing. It is, at last, at rest.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Do eight hours of gyan yog, eight hours of duty and work, and eight hours of rest — this is what Bapuji teaches. And one hour, at the very least, no one can take from me.”

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

The Mind's Toy Is Thought — Keep Your Lamp Burning

In a sorrowful world, how does one keep the mind happy? Bapuji gives an answer of disarming (remarkable) simplicity: the mind needs a toy — and the mind's toy is thought. Give the mind an elevated thought to hold, and it will be happy. The mind will always hold something; that is its nature. Left alone it picks up worries, grievances, and fears, and turns them over all day. Take the low toy from its hands and give it the highest one.

And this is far more than a trick of cheerfulness. When the soul maintains elevated, joyful, and spiritually powerful thoughts even amidst the sorrow and challenges of the world, it attracts immense divine light and spiritual energy into its aura. This inner radiance gradually lifts the soul beyond the influence of disease, sorrow, fear, and negativity — bringing greater peace, strength, and freedom. Such a soul becomes, without effort, a source of upliftment for everyone around it.

Now hear Bapuji's teaching on what your worry actually accomplishes. Carrying all this tension and stress — where will it take us? What will our worrying change? It will raise your blood pressure and it will raise your sugar — and it will not produce a single sweet in the body. Nothing outside improves because you suffered inside. So the instruction is joyful and direct: live bindas — live light. Drop the load you were never asked to carry.

What, then, is our real work in a troubled world? Only this: keep your own lamp burning. Truth cannot be forced on anyone by argument — a lamp does not argue with the darkness; it simply burns. You cannot wake a person who does not wish to wake. But you can live with such ease and such peace that curiosity awakens by itself in the one who watches you. Change comes not by lecturing, but by touching.

So before becoming a lamp for others, steady your own flame first. One single human being who is peaceful and awake within carries more effect than a thousand speeches. Your own steadiness is the greatest gift you can give this world. And if the sorrow of the world still presses on your heart, do not sit and burn in it — turn your sorrow into seva. Sorrow does not dissolve by brooding; working, serving, sharing — it transforms into compassion. Sow the seeds; leave the harvest to its season.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

Protecting Your Light — Soul Vision and the Sealed Aura

A truly stress-free life must remain steady even in the presence of difficult people. Bapuji's teaching here is both the most loving and the most practical in this whole book — and it stands on two legs: divine vision, and wise protection.

First, the vision. True knowledge teaches us to see good in everyone — not by looking at the outer form, but by looking at the soul within. When we judge another as good or bad by their body, appearance, or behaviour, we go wrong at the very root. Use atmic drishti — the soul's vision — and see the soul, not the body. Every being before you is a soul, a child of the Supreme, pure at its very core. Let even your love rise from the level of the body to the level of the soul: body-love is conditional and fragile; soul-love is unconditional and steady, and sees the divine in every being. And know this: when thoughts of compassion and welfare are formed again and again, they do not simply pass away — they are recorded in the causal body, and from there they strengthen the vibrations of peace you send into the world.

Yet Bapuji is deeply realistic. Seeing the soul in everyone does not mean ignoring what stands before you. Some souls are not yet ready to change. They will not shift through words, love, or gentle influence — they will change only when they pass through the fire of their own consequences. With such souls, the wise course is not to keep engaging, not to keep staring at their negativity, and not to keep absorbing their energy. From heavily negative souls, stay far away — so far away that you do not even take their shadow. This is not harshness. This is wisdom. A soul whose aura is thick with darkness cannot even receive the vibrations of Param Shanti; the light simply cannot enter what is so densely closed. The most powerful thing you can do for them is to hold them in good wishes — from afar.

Then, the protection. Bapuji teaches that a soul can seal its own aura, creating a shield of divine light around itself. Do this three times a day, through a simple and sincere resolve — much like a prayer: “let my aura be sealed.” This is not a ritual; it is an act of conscious intention. Negative entities and dark energies cannot bear the presence of a bright, powerful white aura — before genuine soul-light they are weakened, diluted, and simply cannot enter.

So the final practice is balance: see the soul in all, send out the vibrations of peace — and still protect your own light by keeping away from whatever would drain it. In this way the soul keeps its mind clear and strong, and remains, in its own quiet way, a source of peace in the world.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

Aatma to ekdam paak hai.”*

“Do not look at the body — with the soul’s eye, see the soul. The soul is utterly pure.”

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

When the Record Is Erased, the Mind Becomes Still by Itself

We now reach the deepest secret of the stress-free life — the reason why everything taught so far actually works. At the root of the restless mind lie desire, attachment, and craving. And Bapuji reveals where they truly live: desire and vasana are rooted in the records of the causal body. They are not abstract feelings; they are stored impressions, recorded deep within the karan sharir across countless lifetimes.

This is why surface control always fails. What lives in the causal body cannot be merely pressed down on the surface — the record itself must be cleared. And this deletion happens through power: through the supreme light, param prakash, and the living connection with the Supreme source.

Bapuji explains the process with beautiful clarity. When the soul abides in its own true form and draws power from its Creator, that power does not simply enter and remain — it flows directly and purposefully into the causal body, the deepest layer of the soul's being, where all the accumulated karmic record is stored. Layer by layer, impression by impression, the recorded wrong actions gathered across countless lifetimes are dissolved by this incoming divine power. Gradually the causal body becomes lighter, clearer — and finally, completely empty.

And when the causal body is fully empty — no record left, no accumulated burden, no stored karmic weight — something extraordinary follows of its own accord. No karmic bondage remains. And with no bondage remaining, the mind, which was restless precisely because of that weight, becomes completely still. The stillness of the mind is not achieved by controlling the mind directly. It is the natural result of the causal body becoming clean and free.

Watch what such a mind is like. It becomes automatic, peaceful, and non-reactive. It is no longer pulled this way and that by old desires, old wounds, or old habits. It no longer jumps at every provocation or chases every craving. It simply rests — clear, calm, and undisturbed. And this is not a state that must be maintained by constant effort; it arises naturally, as the inevitable result of the emptied record. This is the deep healing that the deletion of the causal record brings — not just peace of mind, but complete inner freedom. The soul is no longer driven from within by what it once was. It is free, at last, to simply be what it truly is.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Power seedha karan shareer mein aati hai, aur dheere dheere vikarma vinaash ho jaate hain — mann shaant ho jaata hai.”

“The power goes straight into the causal body, the recorded wrong actions are slowly destroyed — and the mind becomes still.”

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Param Shanti — One Ray Ends the Darkness of Ages

We end where the whole journey was always pointing: at Param Shanti — supreme peace, the original state of the soul, and the summit of the stress-free life.

When a soul, firmly abiding in its own true form, begins to radiate the vibrations of Param Shanti, those vibrations move through layers: first through the causal body, then through the subtle body, then outward into the aura, and from there in all directions, as far as the soul's power can carry them. And here Bapuji reveals something wonderful: within the very word Param Shanti lives param light — supreme light. The vibration of peace and the descent of supreme light are not two things. They are one, joined at their very source, never to be divided. A soul that radiates true peace is at that same moment radiating divine light.

The journey of Param Shanti vibrations — from the soul outward to the world.

Such vibrations do not remain confined within the soul. They fill the mind, the aura — and then flow naturally outward into the home, into the family, into society at large. A soul genuinely established in peace becomes, without even trying, a source of peace for everything and everyone around it. And remember the two directions of this law: negative thoughts do not merely disturb the mind — they create illness, inner disorder, and deeper bondage. Positive thoughts, soul awareness, and true knowledge work the opposite way: they heal. They cleanse the causal body, lift the soul's vibration, and restore health, clarity, and peace from within.

Nor does this peace stop at your own life. As the soul becomes fully conscious, the mind's power grows so vast that a single pure thought — one sankalp — carries the ability to set great change in motion. When an awakened mind sends out thoughts of well-being, thoughts of Param Shanti, thoughts of infinite and boundless peace, those thoughts go out and work upon the world, quietly and powerfully transforming it. Your stress-free life is not a private comfort. It is a contribution to the transformation of the whole world.

How much can one small awakening achieve? Bapuji answers with an image you will never forget: if a cave has been dark for millions of years, the moment a single ray of the sun enters it, the darkness of millions of years is finished. In the same way, if this knowledge descends into your life, the darkness of countless births is finished. Not managed. Not reduced. Finished.

So let the world be as it is. If others do not awaken, the one who knows awakens even more deeply. If the world does not improve — the knower makes himself still purer. If people will not hear the truth — the knower lives it before their eyes. For even one awakened soul becomes, in the darkness, a direction for thousands. This, finally, is the stress-free life: not a life in which nothing ever goes wrong, but a life in which the lamp within never goes out. A life lived as the soul — fearless, unattached, expectation-free, steady in every storm, resting in its own light. A life lived in Param Shanti.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Param Shanti shabd mein hi param light hoti hai — dono saath mein jude hue hain, alag nahi ho sakte.”

“Within the very word Param Shanti there is supreme light — the two are joined together and cannot be separated.”

CHAPTER TWENTY

The Complete Method — One Day in the Stress-Free Life

Everything this book has taught now comes together in one place — a single, living day. Knowledge becomes freedom only when it is practised; so here is the complete method, the real way of the stress-free life, walked through from morning to night. Nothing in it is new: every step has already been given in the chapters behind you. Seen together, they become one simple day — a day anyone can live, beginning tomorrow morning.

The complete method — one day in the stress-free life.

Begin the day as the soul. Before the world enters, let the first remembrance be: "I am not this body. I am the atma — a pure point of conscious white light." Then, with a simple and sincere resolve, seal your aura — "let my aura be sealed" — the first of three times in the day. And keep the unbreakable vow: "One hour is mine — no one can take it from me." One hour of gyan yog, whatever happens; more if you can. Babuji's complete ideal divides the day into three equal parts — eight hours of gyan yog, eight hours of duty and work, and eight hours of rest.

Through the working hours, hold the inner seat. Work fully, and grip nothing — effort is yours, the fruit never was. Watch your own thoughts, feelings, and circumstances as the witness watches: present, clear, and untouched. When difficulty arrives, do not ask “why me?” — ask “what must I learn from this?”, and the difficulty itself becomes your teacher. And whenever the mind begins to worry, remember that its toy is thought — take the low toy from its hands and give it the highest one.

Let your conduct guard your peace. Practise the austerity of speech — words that are true, pleasant, beneficial, and hurt no one — and beyond that, fewer words, softer speech, less unnecessary contact. Keep the food pure, light, and sattvic, for as is the food, so becomes the mind. Seal the aura a second time at midday. And if a heavily negative soul crosses your path, do not absorb, do not engage — keep your distance, and hold them in good wishes from afar.

In the evening, return the mind to its source. Give it silence and solitude, in which its power is rebuilt. Offer it to the Supreme — Manmanabhav — and let it fall naturally still, for the thoughtless state is the deepest healing state of the causal body. From that stillness, send out the vibrations of Param Shanti — to your home, your family, and the world. Seal the aura a third time, and give the body its eight hours of rest.

And be patient with yourself. Go slowly; there is no need for anxiety or impatience. The mind does not transform in a single day, and that is perfectly fine. Some days sattva will rise in you, some days rajo, some days tamo — that is only the atmosphere touching the mind, not a failure of the path. Day by day the record grows lighter; and one day you will find that stillness is no longer your effort — it is your nature. Live this one day, again and again, and Param Shanti stops being a word in a book. It becomes your own experience — the real, complete, and permanent stress-free life.

ANANT PATEL INSIGHT

“Andar se Param Shanti laani hi padegi — aur yeh hamein hi karna hoga, hamare hi liye karna hoga. Koi bahar ka vyakti tumhare sir par haath rakh ke kuch nahi kar sakta.”

“Peace must be brought from within — and we ourselves must do this work, for ourselves. No outer person, by placing a hand upon your head, can do it for you.”

ANANT PATEL INSIGHTS

The essential lines of this knowledge, gathered in Anant Patel's own words.

Chapter One · The Mind Is Bondage, the Mind Is Freedom

“Mann hi bandhan hai, mann hi mukti hai. Jo mann vishayon mein daudta hai, wo bandhan ka kaaran banta hai. Jo mann atma mein thehrtta hai, wahi mukti ka dwar hai.”

“The mind itself is bondage, and the mind itself is freedom. The mind that runs into the objects of the world becomes the cause of bondage. The mind that comes to rest in the soul is itself the door of liberation.”

Chapter Two · Sorrow Is Not Outside — the Root Is Attachment

“Dukh bahar nahi hai — dukh ka strot mann ki aasakti hai. Mukti bahar nahi hai — mukti mann ki disha badalne mein hai.”

“Sorrow is not outside — the source of sorrow is the attachment of the mind. Freedom is not outside — freedom lies in changing the direction of the mind.”

Chapter Three · The Three Chains — Body-Identity, Attachment, Expectation

“Jo badalne wali cheezon mein sthayi sukh dhoondte hain, unka rona kabhi poori tarah khatam nahi hota.”

“Those who search for permanent happiness in changing things — their weeping never fully ends.”

Chapter Four · The Prison of Fear

“The greatest burden of falsehood is fear. Fearlessness is the greatest freedom — the day you stand with truth, that day you walk free of the jail of fear.”

Chapter Five · How the Mind Loses Its Power

“Zyada sochte hain, negative sochte hain, to mann ki gati zyada chalti hai aur mann ki shakti khatam ho jaati hai.”

“When we think too much and think negatively, the mind races — and its power is destroyed.”

Chapter Six · The First Step — “I Am a Soul”

“Mann ki shakti badhaane ke liye, pehle atma ko anubhav karo — main atma hoon.”

“To increase the power of the mind, first experience the soul — I am a soul.”

Chapter Seven · The Witness — That Which Watches Never Changes

“Sharir badalta hai, vichar badalte hain, bhavnayein badalti hain, parasthitiyan badalti hain — kintu dekhne wala nahi badalta. Yahi sakshi atma hai.”

“The body changes, thoughts change, feelings change, circumstances change — but the one who watches does not change. That is the witness soul.”

Chapter Eight · Fire Without Fuel — Dissolving the Mind into Its Source

“Just as a fire without fuel becomes calm, so the mind becomes calm in its own source. The mind is not to be suppressed — the mind is to be dissolved into its source. This is yog; this is dhyan.”

Chapter Nine · Manmanabhav — Won by Surrender, Not by Force

“Tu mann mujhe de de — Manmanabhav. Mann tera markat hai, ghode ki tarah daudta rehta hai.”

“Give your mind to Me — this is Manmanabhav. Your mind is a restless monkey; it keeps running like a horse.”

Chapter Ten · Sthit Pragya — Steady Within, Active Without

“Sthit pragya bano — bheetar se sthit rehkar bhi poori tarah kaam karte raho, sakshi ki tarah. Sukh aaye to behta nahi, dukh aaye to tootta nahi.”

“Become steady in wisdom — remain established within, and still work fully, like a witness. When happiness comes, he is not swept away; when sorrow comes, he does not break.”

Chapter Eleven · From Complaint to Sadhana — “What Must I Learn from This?”

“Jab ‘Mere saath hi kyon?’ ki jagah ‘Mujhe isse kya seekhna hai?’ aayega — tab aankhon ke aansu bhi prarthana ban jaayenge, dukh bhi jagran ban jaayega.”

“When ‘why is this happening to me?’ becomes ‘what must I learn from this?’ — then even tears become prayer, and sorrow itself becomes awakening.”

Chapter Twelve · Truth Makes You Fearless

“Satya hi Shiv hai. Satya hi sundar hai. Satya hi Param Shanti ka dwar hai.”

“Truth is Shiv. Truth is beautiful. Truth is the very door of Param Shanti.”

Chapter Thirteen · Where does truth ultimately lead

“satya marg hai, paramshanti manzil hai.”

“Truth is the path, but supreme truth is the destiny.”

Chapter Fourteen · As Is the Food, So Becomes the Mind

“Jaisa ann khaate ho, waisa mann banta hai.”

“As is the food you eat, so the mind becomes.”

Chapter Fifteen · Silence, Solitude, and the Discipline of the Day

“Aath ghante gyan yog karo, aath ghante duty naukri karo, aur aath ghante aaram karo — Bapuji yahi sikha rahe hain. Aur ek ghanta to mera koi chheen nahi sakta.”

GLOSSARY

1. Atma: The conscious, eternal being within everybody — distinct from the body, the senses, and the mind; the true self and source of all life and awareness. In its original state it is a point of pure divine white light.

2. Param Atma: He is the creator of soul. We call it supreme soul. Supreme soul has power to create many souls. Sometimes we call the creators as supreme soul. When soul is in its true formless divine light form, it has tremendous power to create many souls through affirmation, that is called as supreme soul or “param atma”.

3. Kala: Kala is a unit of measurement of power of the soul . Just like on earth we measure the electric power by “watt” that means it is the capacity of an electrical equipment, similarly in spirituality “kala” means the capacity of a creator or soul. In space there are many creators so they have different magnitude of power that we call power of different celestial degree or kala.

4. Sankalp: A divine intention or resolution. Sankalp is not an ordinary wish — it is an intention charged with spiritual power. As the soul’s aura grows through knowledge and Yog, the sankalpa it offers for betterment of world gradually and surely come to fruition. When soul resolves something to do, this is called as affirmation or Sankalp. Mind power is the power of soul. So higher the kala, higher the power of affirmation.

5. Spandan: Vibration. The effect that arises from sankalp/ a deep thought. The sankalp is the cause; the spandan is the effect that radiates out into the atmosphere.

6. Nirakar / Nirakari: This is formless state of a soul. This is the true divine state of a soul when soul is in the form of divine light. This is also called as the incorporeal state of a soul. In this state soul is termed as supreme soul. This is the ultimate stage of a soul. A formless soul of this purity is what is rightly called Paramatma and ascends directly to Paramdham.

7. Akari: This is subtle form of a soul i.e. the form created out of energy emitted from soul. This is a form created by energy. This form is not visible to our physical eye as it is in subtle form. Soul assumes a subtle form made of supreme elements. This subtle form is called “ Akari”.

8. Sakar / Sakari: The soul acquiring a gross, physical body within this visible, material world of creation. Sakar means "having physical form" — the gross body itself. The physical stage of the soul. When the soul reaches Mrityulok and takes a human body of all five elements, it enters the Sakari condition; the causal and subtle bodies remain at its inner core. Physical form. When the energy of the soul degenerates further, it acquires a physical body made of five elements.

9. Tattva: Element. The fundamental building blocks of creation. The visible world is composed of five elements: earth, water, air, fire, and ether. Tattva in spiritual language is finer than element in the scientific sense. Water, earth, fire elements are visible but air and ether are invisible. Air can be felt by body but ether cannot be felt by physical body. Water, earth are heavier atoms representing heavier elements whereas air, fire and ether are very lighter atoms representing lighter elements.

10. Param Tattva: Supreme elements; the purified, elevated form of the five basic elements. the fundamental substance of higher real creations. Just as a nucleus is finer than an atom, param tattva is finer than tattva (elements). The energy of a param tattva is far greater than that of a tattva. Param Akash, Param Vayu and Param Agni are three param tattva.

11. Param Prakash: Supreme light; the purest form of divine radiance. The highest spiritual light and power. The supreme luminous essence. This is the state of pure soul consciousness.

12. Param Maha Tattva: In incorporeal state soul is in divine light form known as Param Prakash. Around the Param Prakash the energy or divine brilliance is irradiated and that is called Param-Maha-tattva. Param tattva is created from Param Maha tattva so Param Maha tattva is at the highest energy level after Param Prakash. This is also known as Supreme great element.

13. Paramdham: The supreme abode — the original home of souls. Paramdham is the highest dimension within a Solar system— a world of pure divine light where the creator resides in formless form. Souls in Paramdham exist in complete peace, light, and bliss. It is the original home from which all souls come and to which the most advanced souls return. Also called Amarloka — the immortal realm. Every Creator of solar system, Galaxy, Universe, multiverses have their respective supreme abode in incorporeal form.

14. Shiv / Maha Shiv / Param Maha Shiv: Shiv is the incorporeal creator of a solar system. He resides in the paramdham of a solar system which is the supreme abode of solar system. Maha shiv is the incorporeal creator of a galaxy, he resides in the supreme abode of galaxy. Param Maha shiv is the incorporeal creator of a Universe, he resides in the supreme abode of universe. All Paramdhaam are incorporeal worlds of creation whether it is at the level of solar system or galaxy or universe or any creations at higher dimensions of creation.

15. Shakti / Maha Shakti / Param Maha Shakti: In creation of a solar system or galaxy or universe or great universe or any higher dimension of creation, it is a common phenomenon that incorporeal Shiv first creates a Akari Shiv from its energy then Akari shiv creates its feminine divine counter part known as Shakti. Both Akari Shiv and Akari Shakti involves in the furtherance of creation in a solar system. At galaxy level they are known as Akari Maha shiv - Akari maha shakti, at universe level they are known as Akari Param Maha shiv and Akari Param Maha shakti.

16. Peedi: It is generation of creators or supreme souls. In computer world we generally speak as 1st generation technology, 2nd generation technology and so on. Similarly in case of spiritual dimension, the supreme souls are also created chronologically but here we call 1st generation creator as the lowest level like 1st “peedi” or 101 kala 2nd generation creator as the 2nd “Peedi” or 201 kala. In this way here as we go up to higher dimensions, the generation number increases that is number of “peedi” increases along with it the power of supreme soul or creator also increase. The creation is vast so there are supreme souls as well as creation at 21 Peedi, 101 peedi, 1001 Peedi, 11001 Peedi and so on.

17. Brahmand: Our solar system-one unit of creation. In Bapuji’s knowledge, Brahmand refers specifically to a solar system-one universe created Shiv. There are countless such Brahmands inside a single galaxy. Our own solar system is our Brahmand. Each Brahmand has a Kala measure.

18. Maha Brahmand: A Maha Brahmand is a galaxy — a vast cosmic structure within which billions of solar systems revolve in their own orbits. Our own Maha Brahmand is the Milky Way, and within it, our solar system finds its place — one among billions.

19. Param Maha Brahmand: A universe — the larger structure within which galaxies are contained.

20. Had ki Atma: Common souls of lower power, whose composition goes up to the element of ether or the supreme ether, without Param Prakash at their core. They are ordinary souls with limited spiritual power and awareness. Most souls on Earth are Had ki Atma

21. Behad ki Atma: A cosmic soul of infinite power. Behad means beyond limits. Behad ki Atma are souls of immense power, constituted of supreme divine light. They have travelled across galaxies, universes, and vast dimensions of creation. They come to Earth with a specific mission: to transmit knowledge and guide humanity.

22. Behad ki Duniya: The limitless world — creation so vast it has no boundary and immeasurable power.

23. Behad ka Baap: The Supreme Father, the Almighty Authority — the supreme master creator of the limitless creation, beyond the multiverse; the ultimate source of all power and the Great-Great-Grandfather of every soul.

24. Behad Gyan: The supreme knowledge of the Almighty Authority and His limitless creation — revealed through Bapuji, realised directly by him through divine vision; it cannot be found in any scripture.

25. Gyan Marg: It is a path to realise supreme father. In this path a soul always strives to acquire knowledge about its creator and continuously contemplate on this supreme knowledge till the soul realises its supreme destiny. The path of spiritual knowledge.

26. Bhakti Marg: The path of devotion and worship.

27. Gyan Yog: The daily practice of knowledge and remembrance in connection with the Supreme.

28. Yog: Conscious connection between soul and supreme souls or with Almighty Authority through which power is drawn into the soul's being via knowledge and meditation.
(Note: Bapuji corrects it as yog not yoga)

29. Dhyān: Meditation — the continuous, unbroken flow of soul-remembrance.

30. Pratyahar: Turning the consciousness inward, away from its outward flow into the senses.

31. Samadhi: A state of deep meditative absorption in which the soul experiences its true self that is its Origin.

32. Tap / Tapasya: Spiritual austerity — deep, sincere inner effort and discipline that purifies the soul from the disorders of the mind and prepares the intellect to receive higher knowledge.

33. Viveka: Discernment — the power to distinguish true from false, and the lasting from the passing.

34. Dharana: The practical realisation of supreme knowledge through sustained meditation, or Yog, on the various forms of the Supreme Authority. Through regular, diligent practice, the soul's impressions gradually transform, and its true divinity slowly emerges. In this way, the soul becomes the very embodiment of supreme knowledge - not merely knowing it, but living it through intense practice of Yog.

35. Sattva, Rajo, Tamo: The three qualities of nature — purity, passion, and darkness.

36. Gunatit / Nirgun: Transcending all three qualities of nature - Satva, Rajo, and Tamo. Nature around the pure soul is woven from these three qualities. To go beyond them entirely is Gunatit, also known as Nirgun - the state in which all qualities lie hidden, dissolved into stillness. This is the pure, conscious, incorporeal state of the soul.

37. Sanskars: Deep inner impressions or tendencies carried by the soul across lifetimes. In the pure Nirakari stage there are no Sanskars; they accumulate as the soul takes on form and acts within the realms of creation. This is character of soul which is recorded in its causal body. The mind of a soul works according to its sanskar.

38. Karan Sharir: A human being has many bodies even though we can see only physical body but there are subtle bodies inside this physical outline which holds the energy of soul and operates the physical body. So gross physical body is only a medium to carry out work of soul. Physical body gets power from subtle body which comprises of ether element , air element and fire element. Subtle body gets power from causal body which comprises of ether element only. This is called karan sharir which is the store house of the details of karmic accounts of a soul.

39. Vikarm: A sin — negative action committed by the soul that binds it to lower dimensions. Vikarma vinash is the destruction of the effects of these negative actions.

40. Vasana: Deep-rooted desires and attachments that drive the soul's actions into negative dimensions — to be deleted from the causal record, not suppressed.

41. Ichha Matram Avidya: Any desire, by its very nature, is ignorance. The soul in its pure state needs nothing — it is already whole; the moment desire arises, that completeness is broken.

42. Aasakti: Attachment — the mind's grip on persons, objects, and outcomes; the source of sorrow.

43. Moh: Attachment and emotional binding — born of “mine”, from which sorrow arises.

44. Apeksha: Expectation — the demand that everything happen according to oneself.

45. Deh Abhiman: Body-identity — the belief “I am this body”, from which all fear arises.

46. Atma-Bhaav / Deh-Bhaav: Soul-consciousness and body-consciousness — the two directions of identity.

47. Sakshi-Drashta: The witness-observer — the soul as the unchanging seer of body and mind.

48. Sthit Pragya: The one of steady wisdom — not swept away by happiness, not broken by sorrow.

49. Manmanabhav: The Gita's key — “give your mind to Me”; the surrender of the mind to the Supreme.

50. Vairagya: Detachment — living in the world while remaining inwardly free from attachment to its gains and losses. A person may live in grihastha ashram and still possess true vairagya within.

51. Anasakt: Unattached — engaged in work, yet free of the grip on results.

52. Param Shanti: Supreme peace — the original state of the soul. Param Shanti is not merely the absence of noise or conflict. It is the original state of the soul when it rests in its pure divine light form. It is both a living state and a vibration that can be radiated outward. That's why soul always seeks supreme peace or Paramshanti. This is stage when soul establishes itself in its pure divine incorporeal state of supreme light

53. Seva: Selfless service — the best form of which is sharing this supreme knowledge, and spreading the vibrations of Param Shanti through sankalp as the soul acquires power through gyan and yog.

54. Mukti: Freedom — liberation from the cycle of birth and death; the stage when the soul no longer exists separately in creation and dissolves in its creator.

55. Jeevan Mukti: Freedom from all karmic accounts, with complete knowledge of one's creator. The soul exists eternally in the blissful state of its creator. Liberation while living; a state of spiritual freedom attained during one's lifetime.

56. Jeev: The forgotten soul. A divine soul that falls into physical existence through uncontrolled desire, living without awareness of its true origin — bound to instinct, cut off from its own divinity. Simply put: soul + desire = Jeev.

57. Mrityu Lok: The mortal realm — the world of death. the soul, having descended through the higher realms, takes a body of all five elements. This Earth, this physical existence, is Mrityu Lok — the realm of death. Everything here is temporary. The purpose of life in Mrityu Lok is to use it as a crossing: to travel from Mrityu Lok to Amar Lok (the immortal realm, Paramdham). Understanding this transforms one's relationship to the world entirely.

58. Amar Lok: The immortal world; a realm of supreme element where physical death does not exist. a state of existence beyond birth and death.

59. Purusharth: The effort and discipline undertaken by a seeker of truth to realize the Supreme Truth and escape the cycle of birth and death. Under the guidance of a master, and through sustained effort, the seeker moves steadily — from the illusion of this gross world of five elements toward the supreme reality of the divine, incorporeal world. This is the spiritual effort of self-enquiry and meditation, undertaken to understand the science of creation of soul also known as Brahm Gyan.

60. Sanatan Dharm: Before any religion established on earth, there is one religion since the beginning of creation which is eternal that is called Sanatan Dharm. Hindu religion is also known as Adi sanatan Dharm i.e. the religion which is there right from the beginning of creation which still continue to exist and it will also continue to exist in future. The eternal religion — the one religion present from the beginning of creation of this Brahmand, also known as Adi Sanatan Dharm. This is the eternal religion of this Brahmand.

61. Guru: A spiritual instructor who shows the soul the path from darkness to enlightenment.

62. Adhyatm: The inner science of the soul — the only medicine that reaches the subtle and causal bodies.
